Harrison E. Spangler, chairman of the Republican National Committee, charged yesterday that President Roosevelt in his Wednesday night speech had "launched his campaign for a fourth . . . term" and had made a "bold bid" for the soldier vote in 1944.

"Every American is determined to take care of these returning heroes," Spangler said, "and it will be the Nation that does it and not a personal beneficence of the President."

Spangler formally requested the Office of War Information and the War and Navy Departments to see to it that his remarks, together with the comment of others, are published in Army newspapers and ships bulletins and otherwise communicated to the forces overseas.

Benefits "Dangled"

Earlier several other politicians, including at least one Democrat, expressed the opinion that President Roosevelt had opened his campaign for a fourth term. They particularly noted his "dangling" of Government benefits "before the eyes of the soldiers."

However, Senator Guffey (Democrat) of Pennsylvania, an ardent supporter of the New Deal, said he could see no "political aspects" to the President's total victory speech.

Senator "Cotton Ed" Smith (Democrat) of South Carolina, a White House critic, saw the speech as "a bid for the soldiers' vote for a fourth term." He also thought it significant that the President had announced that coffee rationing was over and that more sugar was on the way.

"It's my opinion," the South Carolinian said, "that we will see more letting up on rigid rationing as time goes on. That's all a part

839,013 Civilians In D. C. Reported By Census Bureau

Washington's civilian population has reached 839,013 as of March 1, an increase of 180,995 since April 1, 1940, the Census Bureau announced yesterday.

This figure showed an increase of 27.5 over 1940 but it did not include the population in nearby Maryland and Virginia. Washington's metropolitan population has been estimated at more than a million persons.

The civilian population nationally decreased 3,100,000, the bureau said, with only the District and 12 states showing actual increases. The greatest drop was in New York State, 654,892, and the largest percentage decline was in North Dakota, 16.4 per cent.

Give Air Power Its Wings

MR. PRESIDENT:

TWO statements stuck out of your report to the Nation Wednesday night which merit reflection. One was your praise of the "wise and skillful leadership" of General Eisenhower. The other was your dismissal of the distinction between the fighting front and the home front. You stated that the two fronts are "inexorably tied together."

As we see it, Mr. President, your two statements are interrelated, though you yourself did not establish the connection. We propose to do just that.

The plain fact is that there are two fronts. And no amount of haranguing will unite them. What will make them one and indivisible is the establishment in Washington of the "wise and skillful leadership" for which you justly praised General Eisenhower. What is the secret of Eisenhower's "wise and skillful leadership?" In a word, proper organization. Let us go tc Eisenhower, then, for a lesson in organization. As one illustration: start at the military end. As commander in chief, Eisenhower recognized realities and picked three deputies for land, sea, and air: Alexander, Cunningham, and Tedder—they are all equal. That equality, topped by Eisenhower's authority, insures superb teamwork.

There is no similar pattern on the home front. That hampers the organization at the fighting front. That is what makes the men in the fighting lines call Washington the home front, among other things. The fighting front gets a runaround in Washington when supreme decisions are sought—because the setup is different.

THE situation could be remedied easily. Eisenhower has an up-to-date organization. Here in Washington you are directing the war with the organization of World War I. Air power is missing among your deputies. There is no Tedder. General Arnold is not a deputy to you as Commander in Chief, but is subordinate to General Marshall as Army Chief of Staff, and is so regarded by the Navy. Your deputy for AIR should be in control of AIR whether AIR is used in cooperation with the Army or in cooperation with the Navy. The present setup is land and sea, as of old. You are keeping air power in Cinderella's role. Even the traditional British are not so hidebound. In London they have a duplicate of Eisenhower's organization in three chiefs of staff under Winston Churchill.

That is why, on the military side, Mr. President, the fighting and home fronts are not "inexorably tied together." You can tie them together by a stroke of your august pen. It is the fault of leadership that it has not been done before, not the fault of the people. Don't blame the people for making the distinction between the fighting and the home fronts. Don't blame the press. You and you alone can make the link. In you both the office of Commander in Chief and President are combined.

With all respect, Mr. President, we ask you to reexamine your own organization, and then look at Eisenhower's, and the conclusion will be inescapable. Give air power its wings in your counsels, Mr. President. Advance its status and you will advance the bomber line to victory.

Congress Hails Soldier Program; All Ready to Help

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

President Roosevelt's minimum 6-point program for veterans of World War II yesterday brought a rush of congressional indorsements amid every indication that Congress will raise the President's ante before it gets through with soldier legislation.

If history repeats, and Congress follows its traditional policy of aiding veterans of other wars, some legislators predicted it will be the White House in the end which applies the brakes on the inevitable bonus legislation.

"I'll bet 100 bonus bills are dropped into the hopper in the next term of Congress," said one House Ways and Means committeeman.

For the present, most members agreed with the President that the chief civil life concern of returning veterans will be jobs, job training and security. Toward this end legislative machinery will start churning in the fall.

President's Program

The President's minimum program: (1) Mustering-out pay to tide over the job-hunting period, (2) unemployment insurance if no job is found immediately, (3) education and trade training at Government cost, (4) full Social Security credit for all time spent in the armed forces, (5) liberalized provisions for hospitalization, rehabilitation and medical care, (6) pensions for disabled veterans.

Many of the points already are covered in legislation now pending

Restoration Of Fire Sirens Ordered by D.C.

Army Tells Mason Use on Trucks Was Never Prohibited

By Elwin Stouffer
Post Staff Writer

The District Commissioners were informed by the Army yesterday that use of sirens on fire trucks never have been prohibited, leading the Commissioners immediately to order sirens used again after admitting possible error "in our administrative judgment."

The controversy resulted from the collision of a hook-and-ladder truck with a commercial truck and trailer which took the life of Fireman Pvt. Everette Owens, driver of the truck, and injured six other persons. Blame has been tentatively placed on the insufficient warning of the fire apparatus bell.

The order for restoration of sirens climaxed an exchange of letters between Commissioner Guy Mason and Maj. Gen. John T. Lewis, commanding officer of the Washington Defense Area, who, in answer to a letter from Mason requesting permission to continue the use of sirens, stated:

"In response to your letter of July 28, which is the first specific request, either in writing or orally, received by this headquarters, you are informed that the Air-Raid Protection Regulations No. 1, issued by this headquarters do not prohibit the use of sirens on moving fire vehicles as long as confusion with air-raid signals does not result.

"You are authorized to use sirens on moving fire vehicles in answering fire calls. The use of sirens should be confined to short blasts at street intersections or in con-

20,000 OCD Recruits Needed

Thousands to March, 17 Bands To Participate in Parade Today

The biggest parade in Washington since President Roosevelt was inaugurated on March 4, 1933, will take place on Pennsylvania Avenue at 6:15 p. m. today in the opening gun of a campaign to enlist 20,000 additional workers in the civilian defense program.

Included among the 14,000 marchers for the first time on parade here will be WAACS, WAVES, SPARS and Women Marines. Military officials say this is the last time this year any contingent of the armed forces will be allowed to parade here.

Besides the women marchers soldiers, bluejackets and marines will be in the line of march as well as motorized artillery, tanks, anti-aircraft guns, searchlight batteries and other air-raid defense weapons.

Music will be provided by 17 bands instead of the eight originally secured. These bands will be from the Armed services, Washington and adjoining counties.

The parade will be divided into four sections: Military units, defense volunteers, patriotic organizations and civilian groups.

William Mileham, chief air raid warden, will lead the 6500 wardens expected to participate in the event. There also will be wardens from Montgomery, Prince Georges and Charles counties in Maryland and Arlington and Fairfax counties in Virginia.

Numerous organizations have contributed floats to the event, and several civilian organizations will have motorized contingents.

In order to permit District employes who wish to take part in the parade to have sufficient time to make the necessary preparations, they will be released from work at 3 p. m. under orders of the District Commissioners.

Following the parade the Air Raid wardens will assemble in front

Nazis Rush New Troops To Save Orel

Russian Guns, Cavalry Push Defenders Back For 6-Mile Gain

By Lynn Heinzerling
Associated Press Staff Writer

London (Friday), July 30.—German units from as far as France and Germany rushed into the threatened Orel sector today as Red artillery pounded the countryside and Russian cavalry charged the weary German defenders, who were pushed back six miles and pried from 40 villages.

The Soviet midnight communique giving these new details said the Germans were snatching reinforcements from every available front in their determination to prevent a major debacle at Orel, a keystone in the entire German defenses.

The communique described them as "march battalions," a German expression meaning troops hurriedly organized and sent to the front before completing their full training.

3300 Germans Killed

More than 3300 Germans were killed in the Orel fighting yesterday as the battle burned brightly despite the rain and muck that sent troops floundering and splashing in attack and counterattack.

One Red army cavalry unit smashed through the enemy at three strongly fortified places north of Orel and the Germans ran, the communique, recorded here by the Soviet monitor, said.

Projectiles of massed big guns, one of Russia's most effective weapons in the present war, were described by a German war reporter as "cursed Russian artillery fire." The report, broadcast by Berlin and recorded by the Associated Press, said the Russians were "waging a war of attrition against us. They try to make us lose our nerve in this artillery duel. Shells are whistling over our heads. Our tank grenadiers stand up to it all."

Tanks, Planes Knocked Out

In the Belgorod direction south of Orel, weakened German morale was indicated by the Soviet communique. Red reconnaissance groups were conducting active operations when a large force of Germans, taking a raid by scouts to be an attack, began to flee. The scouts wiped out 60 Germans until the infantry arrived to help them in the unexpected victory and together they took over a populated place.

Thirty-eight more German tanks were knocked out and 63 planes

Offensive Stepped Up

Navy undersea hunters have pulled down 10 Japanese ships and damaged four others in heavy blows at the enemy's far-stretched supply lines in the Pacific, an official war bulletin disclosed yesterday.

The new sinkings, none previously announced, boosted to 297 the number of Japanese ships which have been sunk or damaged by American submarines since the war began, according to Navy communiques.

Details Not Disclosed

All of the 14 new victims were either transports or cargo vessels of various types and sizes. When and where they were hit was not disclosed beyond the fact that the damage was done in the Pacific and Far East.

News of the sinkings, following closely word of new blows from the air against Japanese outposts at Kiska and Wake Island during the past week, hinted at the mounting energy of what President Roosevelt a few hours earlier described as the whittling down and pushing around the Japs are getting from the Aleutians to New Guinea.

In a scant dozen lines, the Navy related the new victories.

Cargo Ship Toll Now 210

"United States submarines have reported the following results of operations against the enemy in the waters of these (Pacific and Far East) areas," the communique said:

"(a) Two large transports sunk.
"(b) Two large cargo vessels sunk.
"(c) Three medium-sized cargo vessels sunk.
"(d) Two medium-sized tankers sunk.
"(e) One small cargo vessel sunk.
"(f) One large cargo vessel damaged.
"(g) Three medium-sized cargo vessels damaged."

The report added that "these actions have not been announced in any previous Navy Department communiques."

Kentucky Accident Claims 20

50 Dead in Plane Crashes, Many Are Military Personnel

(Plane crashes announced yesterday took the lives of 50 persons, mostly military men and cadets. Details below.)

By the Associated Press

Bowling Green, Ky., July 29.—Charred bodies of 20 victims of an American Airlines transport plane which plowed into a field near Trammel, Ky., and burned last night were removed from the wreckage late today and brought here and to Nashville, Tenn., while the two lone survivors remained in a hospital here.

The crash, which took the lives of several military officers, important industrial leaders and a young mother and her baby, was being investigated by Civil Aeronautics Board officials and representatives of the airline.

S. K. Hoffman, of Williamsport, Pa., chief engineer of the Lycoming Division of American Aviation, Inc., and First Lieut. Glenn Fellows of Love Field, Tex., escaped through a kick-off window of the plane. Both were in the Bowling Green Hospital tonight.

Hoffman suffered a broken ankle and minor bruises and burns.

Fellows, who was given plasma treatment, was not in condition to talk. Hospital aides said the extent of his injuries had not yet been determined.

The plane, piloted by Capt. Harry A. Stiller, of Cleveland, Ohio, according to airlines officials, left Louisville, Ky., for Nashville, Tenn., at 9:54 p. m. yesterday and was last heard from at 10:30 p. m. at Smith Grove, Ky. The crash occurred shortly afterward.

An account of the crash was given by Hoffman, he said:

"We were coming in, evidently trying to land because of the weather. The pilot had cut the engine down but apparently saw he was in the wrong place and gave her the gun.

"We bounced a couple of times and stopped. Everybody was trying to get to the door. The lights went out . . . I pushed a window out and sprawled on the ground."

Hoffman said he had tried to open the plane door but failed, "then I tried the window but it was an oven inside and I couldn't make it."

The airline casualty list included the names of Mrs. Lucy Frickel Beasley, former airline stewardess and wife of Maj. Lynn Beasley, of Nashville and Fort Leavenworth, Kans., and their 11-months-old daughter, Joan.

Ernest Williams, a Kentucky highway patrolman, quoted Lieut. Fellows as saying a man had fallen across the door and the others piled on him in their efforts to get out after the plane had crash-landed. The body of the child was under that of a man in the doorway, indicating that he had attempted to carry the infant to

Praises House of Savoy

By Daniel De Luce
Associated Press Staff Writer

Allied Headquarters in North Africa, July 29.—Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower asked the Italian people today to "cease immediately any assistance to German military forces in your country" as one price for "peace under honorable conditions."

"If you do this we will rid you of the Germans and deliver you from the horrors of war," he said in a broadcast which commended the Italians and the Royal House of Savoy for dropping Benito Mussolini . . ." the man who involved them in the war as a tool of Hitler and brought them to the verge of disaster."

(The Swiss telegraphic agency "published with reserve" a dispatch from the Italian border saying it had been "learned in Rome that the Badoglio government is examining the conditions of peace sent by General Eisenhower."

Britain Declared "Too Drastic"

(The Rome radio, while apparently not replying directly to Eisenhower, took the line that the Allies were demanding too drastic terms for peace—perhaps a bargaining attempt to soften Allied demands.

(The broadcast complained that Britain wants a "Carthagenian peace"—a peace which would completely wipe out the defeated.

(Referring to Foreign Minister Anthony Eden's statement that Italy would not be allowed to retain all of her African possessions after honorable surrender, the broadcast said: "Please note that Mr. Eden's words were spoken three days after the disappearance of Mussolini and after the fall of the Fascist regime." This took the familar tact that now that fascism was gone, the Allies should reach terms other than unconditional surrender.

Offers Prisoner Exchange

(A Stefano news agency dispatch, also broadcast, said that unconditional surrender was "a formula which is empty of any political sense." This dispatch, which seemed to be arguing with the Allies for better peace terms, said that such demands are "a fanatic Anglo-Saxon mistake," adding: "Our enemies are showing they do not know us, and they ignore the Italians."

The Allied commander in chief also offered to return the "hundreds of thousands" of Italian prisoners taken in Tunisia and Sicily if all Allied prisoners "now in your hands are restored safely to us and not taken away to Germany."

The text of his broadcast follows:

"We commend the Italian people and the House of Savoy for ridding themselves of Mussolini, the man who involved them in the war as a

Italy Buzzes Over Proposal Of Eisenhower

Officially-Banned Text Is Distributed By the Underground

By the Associated Press

Bern, Switzerland (Friday), July 30.—Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower's peace terms, officially banned from publication in Italy, quickly appeared today on the streets of the principal cities in mimeographed form.

Nothing else was discussed on streetcars and in cafes by the Italians, who were in the throes of a virtual social revolution.

Strikes continued in a number of important northern factories and fighting broke out in sectors north of Rome. These came after Italians found to their dismay that the new government of Marshal Badoglio had suddenly clamped on authoritarian measures and censorship that smacked of the ousted fascism.

Although the Badoglio government announced the arrest of all high Fascists, it also sharpened its orders to halt any political activity that would prove embarrassing.

Popular Leaders Arrested

But the arrests of popular leaders by army men was creating the feeling that the military were associating themselves with reactionary ideals.

Liberal and Leftist Italian political leaders were growing bitter and many were convinced that Badoglio created a sham drama of liberalism by allowing the press and the people two days of free expression in order to discover the government's secret opponents.

Ford, 80 Today, Sees Need For More Industry in Nation

By David J. Wilkie
Associated Press Staff Writer

Detroit, July 29.—Henry Ford, who will observe his eightieth birthday anniversary tomorrow in excellent health and as optimistic as ever, asserted today that business and industry "must build the physical basis of the good society."

And, he added, business and industrial effort must be developed around the philosophy that the only real benefit is the general benefit.

"There must be more and more industry," Ford said. "It is essential to political and economic freedom, and anything that hinders industry is harmful to the American ideal."

Ford comes to his eightieth birthday with heavier responsibilities than he has had in approximately a quarter century, but seemingly in the best health he has enjoyed at any time and thoroughly able to carry on indefinitely. After a lapse of nearly 25 years, he took over again the presidency and general managership of the Ford Co. following the death several weeks ago of his son, Edsel B. Ford.

"If I felt any better," he remarked, "I'd have to run."

Ford, who developed an initial investment of $28,000 four decades ago into an industrial empire that today has assets worth more than 800 million dollars, stressed that his company has been able to do "many things that needed to be done" because it has been "free from all stockholders and financial control."

"We never made money our main object," he said. "We regarded it as one of the tools, one of the by-products of business, and as a result

Breakthrough

By Relman Morin
Associated Press Staff Writer

Allied Headquarters in North Africa, July 29.—American and Canadian troops have cracked the mountainous core of the Messina bridgehead to raise hopes tonight of a quick conquest of northeastern Sicily.

In a swift 12-mile overnight advance, the Americans captured the inland road junction of Nicosia at the base of the Axis triangle, and the Canadians overran the village of Agira, 7 miles to the southeast in a race for the western side of Mount Etna.

The seizure of the two towns threatened to collapse both Axis flanks, the northern one based at Stefano Di Camastro on the Tyrrhenian Sea, and the eastern anchor at Catania on the Ionian Sea.

(In Washington Undersecretary of War Patterson said the final conquest of Sicily was "a matter of days.")

Communications Cut

The two seizures were described as the most important strategical development of the last week, for they cut direct communications between the two Axis flanks, and threatened to cause a general German withdrawal from the Catania area where the British Eighth Army long has been tied down in trench warfare.

Fifty miles ahead of the Americans under Lieut. Gen. George S. Patton, jr., is Taromina, eastern coast city midway between Catania and Messina. The Seventh Army column is beyond Nicosia tonight, striking for the intermediate points of Troina and Randazzo above Mount Etna.

It is estimated that 40,000 Germans are spread between Catania and the north coast along the Mount Etna foothills. The capture Allied Headquarters in North Africa, July 29 (AP).—The enemy still is reinforcing Sicily. German parachute battalions were among the arrivals and were reported to be resisting with a fanatical fury reminiscent of the Japanese. In one instance 250 were surrounded in a small area and more than 200 died before the remainder quit.

One prisoner grabbed a British officer's hand and bit it through, while another spat in the face of an intelligence officer. It was believed the Germans' almost maniacal tactics derived from their knowledge that Italy might be getting ready to make peace.

Sicilian Prelate Visions Peace Bid

Palermo, Sicily, July 26. (Delayed) (INS).—Cardinal Lavitrano of Palermo received Lieut. Gen. George S. Patton, jr., commander of the American Seventh Army, and told reporters he believes Italy soon will negotiate a separate peace. The prelate asserted that Sicilians regarded the overthrow of Mussolini as "a hopeful sign for quick cessation of hostilities."

'Game Is Up' for Italy, Badoglio Reported to Have Told Nazi Ambassador

Distrust Halts Hitler Troops, Madrid Hears

By Charles S. Foltz
Associated Press Staff Writer

Madrid, July 29.—Accounts of developments in Italy made available today by Italians in Madrid gave a picture of disagreement and distrust between the Germans and Italians which has halted, at least temporarily, plans for the German reinforcement of Italy.

One version even described the new Italian Premier, Marshal Pietro Badoglio, as convinced that his government could not continue the war and as having told the German Ambassador that the game was up.

(News is carried from Italy to Spain by travelers and newspapers carried by the Italian air line, Ala Roma. Some of it may, of course, be disseminated for propaganda purposes. Much is not confirmed by other sources.)

The Story in Summary

A summary of these Italian accounts of events since Badoglio supplanted Benito Mussolini Sunday follows:

The King, Badoglio and Count Galeazzo Ciano, former Foreign Minister and Mussolini's son-in-law, agreed that Mussolini was so identified with fascism that his downfall meant the collapse of the whole system and that collapse of the system in turn meant Italy would be unable to continue the war.

German Ambassador Hans-Georg Viktor von Mackensen, who was kept informed of events at the council meeting Saturday, was called in to confer with Badoglio at the Royal Palace for the first time at 11 a. m. Sunday.

By that time, although there was still no public announcement of the crisis, rumors of what had taken place at the meeting already were running through the city and little groups gathered on Rome's sidewalks.

When the German Ambassador was ready to return to his embassy at noon he was sufficiently well aware of the probable reaction of the public to the reports of Mussolini's resignation that he accepted the offer of a palace car to return to his embassy instead of his own.

Von Mackensen telephoned Berlin immediately from the embassy, reporting on Badoglio's ultimatum: Either Berlin abandon its plan to retire behind the Po Valley and give full support to the defense of southern and central Italy, or Italy would sue for peace.

What Von Mackensen added to that message is unknown, but it was probable he even then was able to tell Berlin of the coming complete collapse of fascism, chaos in Italian transport and the probability that Badoglio himself would not be able to force the Italian army to continue the fight on Germany's side.

Called for 40 Divisions

In any event, he was back at the palace Sunday afternoon with a German pledge to support "within reason" the Badoglio government's defense of southern Italy.

Badoglio told him the Germans might have to send 40 divisions to Italy in addition to the estimated 20 already there.

That information also was telephoned to Berlin and Von Mackensen was forced to return to the palace for a third time to report that while such a quantity of troops was not immediately available, some already were being moved toward the northern frontiers and Germany pledged the rest.

This statement was said to have aroused Badoglio's suspicions that in the guise of sending troops and munitions to southern and central Italy the Germans might be planning to move into the Po Valley and stay there.

According to Italian sources, the marshal therefore asked the German Ambassador to bring the forces in slowly and keep them moving. Badoglio then advised his army commanders in northern Italy to watch the movements and keep him advised. Then the announcement of Mussolini's resignation was made on the nation's radios.

Promises Troops Would Be Sent

The resulting outburst of enthusiasm, chaos and release of long-pent-up vows of revenge against fascism, particularly the reaction in northern Italy, was such that by Monday noon reports reaching Von Mackensen must have been very gloomy.

Still he advised Badoglio, who was mainly concerned at the time with keeping order in Milan and other cities, that Germany was sending the necessary reinforcements.

Badoglio, however, needed no further evidence that the war could not be continued by his government nor any other, and according to Italian sources told Von Mackensen the game was up. He asked the German Ambassador to halt the flow of German troops and just to be sure it was halted advised the army commanders in northern Italy of his decision.

Clashes which were reported to have occurred Monday night and Tuesday morning between Italian and German troops apparently were due to this order.

German commanders of troops moving into northern Italy were reported to have notified their superiors it was not a question of supporting an army that was routed but of occupying an area where the Italian army was in complete command of the situation and the people only needed the Army's permission to join it in ousting the Germans.

From Monday night, when Von Mackensen's report reached Berlin, the moving of German troops and munitions into the Po Valley slowed up, and in Rome Tuesday Badoglio issued orders they be stopped.

Throughout Tuesday afternoon and evening Von Mackensen made frequent trips to the royal palace and was frequently kept waiting while Badoglio conferred with the King.

On Wednesday the order announcing that the Fascist Party was dissolved appeared in the press after a cabinet meeting the night before made the decision. At the same time, Badoglio authorized the police to approve all requests for exit permits from German and Japanese officials and private persons who had been storming the police offices since early Monday.

The press was given instructions which resulted in last night's and today's rush of peaceful editorials.

Il Giornale d'Italia, whose director, Virginio Gayda, was reported without confirmation to be a suicide published an editorial which never stemmed from his Fascist pen.

"We Italians will show that we are mature enough for responsibility and being free men," the paper said.

The newspaper which last week was Lavoro Facista and now is Lavoro Italiano talked editorially of the "hour of reconstruction."

Some Nazis See Italy Out of War in 10 Days

By the Associated Press

Stockholm, July 29.—A traveler just arrived from Berlin declared today that German army officers were predicting that Italy would be out of the war within the next ten days.

He declared Mussolini's fall had a "shattering" effect on the spirits of the Italian people and gave this account of German reaction:

Word of Mussolini's fall spread before it was announced by the German radio, making it apparent that the people had been listening to British or American broadcasts and little groups gathered on the streets. Propaganda Minister Goebbels was so annoyed that he ordered the Nazi press to blast "unpatriotic" Germans who listened to foreign radios and spread "Allied rumors."

Germans on the street expressed their reaction by saying "well, the war will soon come to an end."

The severe fighting in the east and Sicily was almost forgotten under the impact of collapsing Italy.

It was something the Germans always feared. They scorned the Italian as a soldier.

Fears of another sort were awakened among the Nazis by the ease with which Mussolini's 20-year-old regime fell into discard. They were anxious about notions it might plant in the minds of the masses of Germans because correspondents reported from Rome that the Italians began asking themselves, "It was so easy, why didn't we do it long ago?"

London, July 29.—"He finally got what he deserved."

The epitaph to Benito Mussolini's 21-year rule of Italy was voiced, not by an Allied leader, but by Count Dino Grandi, former Italian Minister of Justice and one-time Ambassador to Great Britain.

Mussolini was ousted through a conspiracy between Grandi and Marshal Pietro Badoglio, with the secret approval of King Victorio Emanuele, according to neutral dispatches reaching London.

The Berne correspondent of the Stockholm newspaper Svenska Dagbladet said the conspiracy bore fruit at a meeting Saturday afternoon of the Fascist grand council lasting 10 hours.

Mussolini, said the correspondent, opened the meeting by dressing down Grandi.

"I am going to speak about your antecedents," he began.

But Grandi interrupted:

"You do not need to describe corruption. You have more corruption on your conscience than all Italians put together. We well know you have dossiers about our lives. To have reliable friends, you are compelled to have something on them—to be able to frighten them."

When the 19-to-6 vote ousted Mussolini from the council, the Swedish account said, Grandi told the members:

"He finally got what he deserved."

Mussolini then was taken under escort to the Royal Palace, the correspondent reported. After a brief audience with the King, at which the monarch dismissed the dictator without a farewell, Mussolini and other Fascist leaders were sent out of Rome under escort, the dispatch said.

Spends Sixtieth Birthday Near Island of Elba

By the Associated Press

Madrid, July 29.—Benito Mussolini spent his 60th birthday today under guard in an Italian seacoast town not far from the Isle of Elba, Italians in Spain said.

(The Rome radio, making the first reference to Mussolini since his resignation, said merely that he had "disappeared.")

It was not a happy birthday any way the former Duce looked at it.

His favorite daughter, Edda, and son-in-law, Count Galeazzo Ciano, were not with him. The count was one of those Fascist leaders who brought about his downfall and was reported to have sought safety in the Vatican with his wife.

The only similarity between Mussolini's position and that of the man who lived on Elba seemed to be geographical. Napoleon made a comeback later but if Mussolini listened in to Rome broadcasts he must have felt everyhting he stood for in Italy was dead and gone.

In contrast with past years, there was no verbose birthday greeting from Hitler to Mussolini but the Berlin radio reported a Foreign Office spokesman had taken note of the day to praise Mussolini for his creation of Fascism and said "Il Duce has entered the ranks of the great men of history."

Allies Crack Etna Line in Swift Thrust

of Nicosia and Agira, however, deprived them of means to rush reinforcements into the central area except for circuitous coastal roads running through Messina at the northeastern tip of their bridgehead.

The break-through came just when reinforced German divisions had been digging in for a siege, utilizing the natural mountainous defenses.

But General Patton and his Corps Commander, Lieut. Gen. Omar N. Bradley, are old hands at mountain fighting, since they walloped the Germans amid the spiny-backed Djebels of Tunisia. "Outflank and attack" is their doctrine.

The American spurt through Nicosia was regarded as all the more significant because fresh German troops were awaiting their arrival there, and the Americans had spent weary days in cleaning up central and western Sicily before turning methodically eastward to crack the Axis lines there.

Axis positions along the northern and eastern coasts may roll back almost automatically if the American-Canadian drive reaches the road rimming the western side of Mount Etna. The Americans have about 30 miles to go to reach Randazzo, the Canadians about 20 miles for their apparent goal of Adrano farther south.

Stefano di Camastro, the northern anchor, probably will fall soon to another American column pushing along the coast now that Nicosia, 26 miles inland, has been overrun

The Canadian Maple Leaf First Division made a berserk attack to capture Agira, some 7 miles to the southeast, sending the crack fifteenth German armored division reeling back toward Regalbut.

30 Miles From Catania

The Canadians, on a road running southwest from Mount Etna, were only 30 miles from Catania.

Their victory was gained after prolonged, bloody fighting, in which bayonet charges finally cleaned the Nazi machineguns out of the town's fortified outskirts.

The Americans thrust their armored spearheads deeper into the northern salient with the capture of Pollina, Castelbuono and Gangi, while the Canadians smashing up from central Sicily throttled Axis communications in that sector by taking the important road junction of Leonforte after bitter fighting.

Canadian forces, meeting stiff resistance, reported finding German dead piled in heaps on the outskirts of one town.

It was announced that 75,000 Axis prisoners already were in Allied hands, three-quarters of them having been captured by the Americans. A German prisoner was reported to have admitted to his captors that Nazi forces defending Sicily were shooting their Italian Allies whenever the Italians attempted to surrender.

Bitter Fighting

An Italian communique described the fighting in the north and center as bitter, with the Allies attacking "more violently, with masses of planes in support."

Allied air forces were taking a hand in the main battle, abandoning targets on the Italian mainland temporarily to bomb and cannonade the enemy's front-line positions, communications, supply depots and shipping.

Swarms of fighters and fighter-bombers ranged over the battlefield and immediately behind, pouring steel and explosives on every target they could find. The towns of Regalbuto, Milazzo and areas around Troina, Cesaro and Randazzo at the foot of Mount Etna were subjected to a series of day-long attacks.

Axis fighter opposition continued almost nonexistent, leading Allied observers to express the belief that a serious delay had developed between the production and delivery of enemy planes to the fighting front.

This was further emphasized with the announcement that of 500 Allied bombers and 200 fighters that dropped more than 1100 tons of bombs on military targets in Rome July 19 only 5 were lost. The Rome raid was described officially as "one of the most successful of the war," with the raiding planes meeting virtually no opposition.

Military observers estimated that 70,000 German troops and several Axis forces defending the Mount Etna line are composed of some good Italian divisions which escaped from the Americans' lightning conquest of the western part of the island.

spite warning that troops would fire upon demonstrators, dispatches from Bern said, adding that soldiers began putting more machine guns in public squares at Milan. Communists held demonstrations verging upon the proportions of revolution, and in Turin, Italian fashion center, women were wearing red turbans.

A Rome dispatch to the Tribune de Geneve said Badoglio's regime was "just as anxious as Mussolini's to maintain satisfactory relations with Germany," but qualified the declaration with a statement that the Premier Marshal was governed solely by military considerations whereas Mussolini's reasons were ideological and political.

Nebulous rumors of negotiations for an Italian-Allied armistice persisted. Italian brodcasts repeatedly told the populace not to believe false rumors "which will continue to be put in circulation." The Rome station continued to issue belligerent statesments for home consumption, apparently seeking to deflect some of the unloosed anger from the Fascists to the Allies.

Foreign Minister Back

The new Italian Foreign Minister, Raffaele Guariglia, meanwhile, was reported to have arrived home by plane from neutral Turkey after participating in talks with Turkish leaders at which he might have advanced ideas for an armistice.

Reference to clashes between German and Italian troops, which had been reported in dispatches from Bern and Madrid earlier in the week, dropped from the news and a censored message from Rome published by the Tribune de Geneve said that Nazi soldiers again were moving freely in the kingdom's capital.

Fascist Rule Ended

By the Associated Press

London, July 29.—Premier Marshal Pietro Badoglio dissolved the Fascist-packed Italian legislature today and sought by force of arms to still domestic tumult preparatory to climatic battles or a suit for peace.

Both German and Italian troops were dispatched to Fiume and Trieste to combat separatist demonstrations among the 600,000 Croats and Slovenes of Istria, Swiss dispatches said.

The Swiss newspaper Berner Tagwacht told of the military occupation of the Istrian peninsula, Adriatic region which was ceded to Italy by Austria after the last war. It said the Croats and Slovenes demanded that Istria be incorporated into a Slavic state.

The fall of the chamber of fasci and corporations, the legislative instrument set up by Benito Mussolini after the old Chamber of Deputies was dissolved December 14, 1938—as announced by the Rome radio, which said King Vittorio Emanuele approved.

Elections After War

"A new chamber of deputies will be elected within four months after the termination of the war and a new legislature will be set up," it said.

Formation of now political parties and the wearing of any political symbol other than the tricolor was forbidden for the duration. The radio said release of political prisoners had started: one Rome dispatch said 4000 already were released.

tool of Hitler and brought them to the verge of disaster.

"The greatest obstacle which divided the Italian people from the United Nations has been removed by the Italians themselves.

"The only remaining obstacle on the road to peace is the German aggressor who is still on Italian soil.

"You want peace. You can have peace immediately and peace under honorable conditions which our governments have already offered you.

"We Are Coming As Liberators

"We are coming to you as liberators.

"Your part is to cease immediately any assistance to German military forces in your country.

"If you do this we will rid you of the Germans and deliver you from the horrors of war.

"As you have already seen in Sicily, our occupation will be mild and beneficient.

"Your men will return to their normal life and to their productive avocations and, provided all British and Allied prisoners now in your hands are restored safely to us and not taken away to Germany, the hundreds of thousands of Italian prisoners captured by us in Tunisia and Sicily will return to the countless Italian homes who long for them.

"Ancient traditions and liberties of your country will be restored.

"EISENHOWER."

Broadcast in Four Languages

The general's message was broadcast uninterruptedly for two hours in Italian, French, German and English, and every 15 minutes a special program in Italian containing his main points was given.

(The references to "honorable conditions" already offered the Italians apparently referred to the Roosevelt-Churchill message to the Italian people July 17, before the overthrow of Mussolini.

"The sole hope for Italy's survival lies in honorable capitulation to the overwhelming power of the military forces of the United Nations," that message said. "The time has come for you to decide whether Italians shall die for Mussolini and Hitler—or live for Italy, and for civilization."

(General Eisenhower's commendation of the people and their King for ridding themselves of Mussolini was the first from any Allied leader. The general is entrusted with any Italian peace offers.

Secretary of State Hull was asked in Washington if there was any difference between "honorable" peace terms and "unconditional surrender." He answered that President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill had made it clear that the inflexible Allied policy is unconditiona surrender of the Axis forces.)

Seizure of Poultry Ends Black Market

In Mining Towns

OPA Finds Food Price Violations

By Ben Gilbert
Post Staff Writer

A "raft" of price ceiling violations have been uncovered in coal mining towns, resulting in the suspension of more than 60 Pennsylvania and West Virginia food stores from dealing in rationed commodities, Office of Price Administration officials disclosed yesterday.

Investigations are continuing in other areas where additional suspension orders are anticipated. Suspensions ranged from one to 30 days, depending on the nature of the offense, with the largest number of stores receiving 10 to 15 day suspensions. In minor cases, the store was forbidden to sell only the commodity involved in the violation—in major cases, sales of all rationed commodities were banned.

Suspensions Limited

No store was put entirely out of business, however, since OPA must go to court to secure such action, but may act under the rationing regulations to order limited suspensions.

Altogether, 100 suspension proceedings were instituted in Pennsylvania and West Virginia. In Pennsylvania — principally in the Pittsburgh and Altoona areas—more than 40 suspensions were issued in addition to more than 90 warning notices in very minor cases. Focal points for the West Virginia checks were Charles Town and Wheeling.

The action was taken on the basis of evidence turned up by an OPA survey of price control in mining towns which disclosed price ceilings about 5 per cent above the legal level, supplemented by information provided by the Interior Department, which has been operating the country's coal mines.

Reports on the result of action taken in southern Illinois, Lexington, Ky., and Birmingham, Ala., are still incomplete, but a similar ratio of violations is expected to be reported.

Covered Wide Area

Since the suspensions were issued, OPA officials report an improvement in the general level of price ceiling compliance in mining towns. The suspensions were issued by regional hearing commissioners responsible to Washington who "rode circuit" to cover as much territory as possible.

Precautions were taken to see that no store is stopped from selling rationed food in cases where no other stores are available in the community. In such cases, other penalty means, including fines and possible court action, are considered.

It is understood criminal action is being considered in a few extreme cases.

All kinds of stores—independents, chains, company stores—were found violating the regulations, although the bulk of violations involved independents, OPA officials said. Chains and company stores have generally established machinery to carry out the price regulations, OPA explained, but many independent stores were unfamiliar with the rules. In such cases of unintentional violations, warning notices were issued and the price regulations explained.

Aftermath of Strike

In a number of cases, it was found storekeepers were not aware of the price ceiling recently imposed on fresh eggs. Some stores that have been put out of the meat business for brief periods have shown some ingenuity in adding fish lines they did not previously carry, it was reported.

In many areas, local price panels are being set up to continue the enforcement work.

The coal mine cost of living situation was called forcibly to public attention by John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers, in pressing his coal wage demands. In taking over the coal mines and asking the miners to end their first general strike, President Roosevelt promised that OPA would send in investigators to check on the enforcement of price ceilings.

OPA Announces Action by Army Restores Supply

By Christine Sadler
Post Staff Writer

Since the Army started requisitioning poultry on a Delaware highway eight days ago, the Nation's toughest black market has virtually disappeared, and chickens are going to market at ceiling prices throughout the East, according to reports coming to the Office of Price Administration yesterday.

"Itinerant gypsy truckers have cleared out and we again have a buyer's market," an OPA official declared.

Effects of the Army venture are being felt as far west as Chicago, he said, and in Delaware live chickens yesterday were being offered at 21 cents a pound, or 7½ cents below the legal ceiling.

Chickens on Sale Again

Processing plants that were on the verge of closing down again have chickens. So have the markets in New York and the District. A Baltimore dealer who handled half that city's regular poultry supply has had calls from all surrounding States and as far away as Tennessee offering him shipments.

OPA, which has wrestled with the poultry black market since April, is elated with results and considers it now has a weapon it can use to similar advantage in any other section of the country. The Army, which is still buying chickens from trucks—and not yet getting enough—has signified its willingness to continue its requisitioning technique until the black market is "irrevocably smashed."

It needs one million pounds weekly from the Delaware--Maryland-Virginia area and has not caught up on its purchasing because only Grade A poultry is accepted for military consumption. Upgrading had become such a fixture in the poultry line several weeks may be required to get quality standards back into operation, it was believed.

Picture Grows Brighter

Enforcement officials of OPA said smashing the black market in poultry makes a comparatively bright picture of the total food marketing situation.

Beef is coming to market in sufficient quantities to meet ration demands, and the black market in eggs is "negligible," they said.

Other food price and supply news during the day included:

1. Announcement by the War Food Administration that civilians could count on about 44 pounds of edible fats and oils per capita during the year beginning July 1. This is approximately 5 pounds less than was available in the year just ended and represents a slight decrease in all fats and oils items except margarine, of which there is a greatly increased supply. The butter supply, as previously announced, is sufficient to allow approximately 1 pound a month per person.

2. OPA increased the cents-per-pound ceiling prices for fresh cabbage in 15 States now without cabbage crops to allow for extra transportation costs needed to make the food available in those areas. Virginia was one of the States.

Action on Berries Taken

At the same time it announced OPA regional offices outside the raspberry producing States had been given the power to adjust prices on these berries to levels designed to insure their movement into the "deficit" zones.

3. In a joint statement OPA and WFA announced no ceiling prices would be placed on the 1943 crop of fresh market freestone peaches and Bartlett pears in California as the bulk of peaches have already moved into distributive channels and the pear crop is so plentiful prices have been depressed at the farmer level.

4. To expdite wheat harvesting in Canada and this country, WFA said, a reciprocal agreement has been reached to permit combines and other harvesting equipment, with their operators, to cross the international border.

5. Under auspices of the Combined Food Board, a joint Anglo-American mission of six technical experts have arrived in Argentina to survey facilities for the production of dairy and poultry products, with special reference to processing and dehydrating.

The mission is interested "in the quantities of dried milk, butter, cheese and dried eggs that might be made available to the United Nations under proper conditions of price and quality," the food board said.

Patton Visits

Prelate Sees Peace Bid By Italy

By Michael Chinigo
International News Service Staff Writer

Palermo, Sicily, July 26 (Delayed).—Cardinal Lavitrano of Palermo, one of Sicily's most influential clergymen, expressed his belief today that Italy will negotiate a separate peace with the United Nations.

If the Germans attempt to keep Italy from suing for peace, the cardinal said, the Italian army will join the Allies in battle against the Nazis.

Cardinal Lavitrano, who was a papal possibility at the last consistory when Pope Pius was elected, told me that Sicilians regarded the overthrow of Benito Mussolini as "a hopeful sign for quick cessation of hostilities—the first step toward peace negotiations. All our prayers are in that direction."

Patton Calls

Lieut. Gen. George S. Patton, accompanied by his deputy, Maj. Gen. Geoffrey Keyes, paid a courtesy call on the church leader. The visit took place in a small convent on Palermo's outskirts amid dingy, poverty-ridden surroundings where the cardinal lived, despite the fact that his own residential palace was undamaged by the bombs.

Patton and Keyes met the diminutive prelate in a small, simply furnished room whose only ornament was a large silver crucifix. According to protocol, they genuflected, but the cardinal quickly lifted them up and expressed gratitude for Sicily's deliverance.

"God be thanked," he told them, using me as an interpreter. "God be thanked for Sicily's freedom."

Suddenly the Cardinal asked: "How's President Roosevelt?"

Returning just as quickly to the discussion of his homeland, the Cardinal told Patton he was perfectly satisfied with American treatment of Italian prisoners and civilians—all this even before his guests were seated.

Allowed to Visit Camps

Patton expressed regret that America was forced to fight Sicily and Italy because of Hitler's domination, and Cardinal Lavitrano gracely concurred.

The American general then accorded the cardinal, and all other prelates, full latitude to visit camps and administer to the comfort of prisoners.

The cardinal excitedly rubbed his hands and told his assistant, Bishop Guiseppe Dileo, "I told you so! I told you they'd do it."

Patton smiled broadly, and requested the church's cooperation in gathering up prisoner stragglers and solving a million-and-one other problems connected with the administration of the war-torn territories.

Cardinal Lavitrano promptly agreed—"With all our hearts and with all our abilities."

Commons Fighters Make Apologies

London, July 29 (AP).—Commander Oliver Locker-Lampson and Capt. Alec Cunningham-Reid, members of the House of Commons, apologized today for engaging in fisticuffs yesterday in the corridor after a dispute in the House.

Locker-Lampson told fellow-members that "inasmuch as I was to blame . . . I desire to tender by full apologies." Cunningham-Reid said: "Whoever was in the right or wrong, I apologize to the speakers and to the House for any embarrasment that any action on my part yesterday may have caused."

Plan to 'Share' Gas Angers Midwesterners

By the Associated Press

It was good news yesterday to "ordinary motorists" in the East that they may get more gasoline soon, but Secretary Ickes' statement that supplies in the Midwest and Southwest would be reduced proportionately was described by Senator Wherry (Republican) of Nebraska as angering the people there.

Ickes, as petroleum administrator, told his press conference he is onfident Eastern supplies would be increased within a few weeks. But he made it plain this would be accompanied by an approximate equalization of allowances in sections east of the Rockies.

Hartley Jubilant

The outlook for the East was joyfully received by Representative Harley (Republican) of New Jersey, head of a group of Eastern States Congressmen who have been plugging for larger allowances and for removal of the pleasure driving ban. But Wherry returned here yesterday with word "the people of the Midwest are up in arms" against equalization of Eastern and Midwestern supplies, reducing the latter.

In view of the widespread opposition, Wherry said, he believes the Senate Special Committee investigating the Midwest fuel situation should discuss the question at its Kansas City (Mo.) meeting next week.

Sees Pleasure Ban Lifted

Wherry said he was informed the order would be effective August 15. Hartley predicted lifting of the Eastern pleasure driving ban "within 10 days" with the value of "A" coupons raised "from 1½ to 3 gallons" a week.

"All of the testimony thus far before our committee," Wherry stated, "shows that the only reason for rationing in the Midwest is the bottleneck of transportation to the East. * * * If it's just a question of a bottleneck of transportation, then the proof of the pudding is that we don't need gasoline rationing out there where we have an abundance of gasoline."

New Nazi Troops Hurried to Orel

shot down Wednesday, a special Soviet communique announced earlier.

Heavy artillery duels were reported on the Leningrad front far to the north, but only reconnaissance activity in the Belgorod and Donets Basin sectors south of Orel.

A Moscow dispatch said the Germans were pulling guns and supplies by hand in places where the clinging mud had bogged down machines and even mules.

The capture of the railroad town of Stanovoy Kolodets on the line leading to Kursk placed Russian siege forces 11 miles southeast of Orel. Other forces were within 8 miles on the east and North.

The Germans said officially their lines were "swaying" at Orel.

The Russians said the escape corridor from Orel to Bryansk had been narrowed to about 40 miles by columns driving behind Orel from the north and south.

July Is Driest In D. C. Area Since 1929

As the driest July locally since 1929 approached its end, thundershowers predicted for this afternoon may bring some measure of relief to drought-stricken farming areas adjacent to Washington.

Rainfall so far this month has been 1.46 inches, the Weather Bureau reported yesterday. Normal precipitation for July, usually the wettest month of the year, is 4.711 inches. In 1929 the rainfall totaled but 1.29 inches.

Meanwhile, farmers in Alexandria, Arlington, Prince Georges and other nearby points anxiously scanned the skies as crops drooped toward hard, dusty soil.

"Corn and hay have been especially hard hit," complained Holden Harrison, who farms 200 acres in Herndon. "We're now giving winter feed to our cattle. I estimate that my corn will be only 65 per cent of normal and lespedeza for feed only 50 per cent."

At the 300-acre farm of John Middleton, also in the Herndon vicinity, it was reported that all crops were suffering.

The big-scale worries of commercial farmers had their small-scale counterpart in the fears of local victory gardeners.

Gen. Keyes Now Commands Corps

Allied Headquarters in North Africa, July 29 (AP).—It was announced officially today that Maj. Gen. Geoffrey Keyes is commanding a provisional American Army Corps on Sicily and is deputy commander to Lieut. Gen. George S. Patton, jr.

(It was announced July 24 that General Keyes was commanding an American unit in the invasion, but not that he was in charge of a corps, which consists of two or more divisions.)

Ickes Seeks to Avoid Hard-Coal Rationing

Secretary of Interior Harold L. Ickes indicated yesterday that he hoped to avoid direct consumer rationing of hard coal, but planned to put into effect a system of indirect consumer allocation of the anthracite.

Consumers have been requested, he pointed out, to buy only up to 75 per cent of their normal purchases until September 1. After September 1, efforts will be made to adjust supply inequalities between consuming areas to make sure that everybody gets a fair share, he said.

Communities that are short of anthracite will be guaranteed additional supplies at that time, he said.

The main anthracite consuming area is in New York and New England, but considerable hard coal is used as far south as the District, which lies at the fringe of the consuming area.

Under Ickes' plan, hard coal producers are under orders to make the same distribution arrangements that they made last year until September 1. Then adjustments will be made for increased population in some areas and other factors.

Direct consumer rationing is not desired by Ickes, it was understood, because it will place an additional complicated burden on the industry which may hamper coal distribution.

Under the present system individual dealers will retain enough flexibility to do an efficient job, it is believed. Under rationing, it may be necessary to adopt less efficient distribution methods to make sure that everybody gets his coupon's worth, it was explained.

Morgenthau Calls Taft's Attack Unjust

Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau yesterday accused Senator Taft (Republican) of Ohio of "entirely uncalled for and unjust" criticism of the Treasury's recent pension trust regulations.

Morgenthau held a press conference in rebuttal of Taft's charge that the Treasury disregarded the 1942 Revenue Act and defied the Finance Committee in issuing regulations "attempting to nullify the pension trusts of many important companies."

"Honor" Criticized

The Treasury had ruled that pension trusts which exclude employes making $3000 or less are invalid if employes making over that amount are more liberally treated than the Social Security Act treats employes under $3000.

Morgenthau said the "honor of the Treasury" had been more or less criticized. He turned the floor over to Stanley S. Surrey, tax legislative counsel of the Treasury, who denied that the Treasury had either defied the advice of the Finance Committee or violated the law.

Surrey said it was true that during informal consultation with a Senate Finance Subcommittee Taft thought the regulations were contrary to statute. But he said Senator Vandenberg (Republican) of Michigan "thought the position taken by the Treasury was legally valid—that the Treasury could take that interpretation as a matter of policy. It was simply a matter of desirable policy."

Senators' Stand

Surrey said he did not believe the other Senators present (George of Georgia and Radcliffe of Maryland, Democrats) expressed an opinion that the Treasury position was contrary to statute.

At the Capitol, Senator Taft later told reporters that Senators George, Radcliffe and Vandenberg "entirely agreed with me." He said he was going ahead with his joint resolution invalidating the regulations "regardless of what the Secretary of the Treasury has to say."

Busy Sailor Hero

South Pacific Headquarters, July 13 (Delayed) (AP).—Latest hero of the great air battle off Guadalcanal June 16: James Stalp, 23, first-class seaman from Nashville, Tenn.

Stalp was a gunner on a small ship carrying a deckload of vehicles and gasoline. He was at his post in the bow when a bomb knocked out the gunner's mate, wounded the ship's communications officer and ignited the load of gasoline, setting the vessel afire.

Throwing the officer over his shoulder, Stalp fought his way through flaming wreckage to the stern and put the officer over the side. Returning to his gun, he found the gunner's mate had lost an arm. He applied a tourniquet and lowered the man over the side.

Stalp then wrestled four drums of gasoline overboard, out of the way of the spreading fire. Hearing the cries of a wounded Allied soldier, he brought him up from below decks and lowered him to safety.

Then he went to his gun and shot down a Japanese bomber.

Pilot Rescued by Fishermen Takes 35 Italian Prisoners

By the Associated Press

Allied Headquarters in North Africa, July 29.—Thanks to his parachute 22-year-old Warhawk Pilot John F. Rauth, York, Nebr., was saved from crashing in his disabled plane.

Thanks to four Sicilian fishermen he was rescued from the sea.

Thanks to the Italian army he escaped a heavy barrage of American shells on Trapani.

Thanks to the enemy's lack of fighting spirit he took 35 officers and men prisoners after accepting their weapons.

"It all started when my ship got hit when I was machine-gunning a ship near Trapani, July 23," Rauth reported.

Bailed Out at 700 Feet

"I bailed out 700 feet up and climbed into the rubber dinghy after I splashed into the water. My flying school partner, Flight Officer Bill Slattery, Birmingham, Ala., circled above waiting for an air-sea rescue plane to come for me. When he spied four fishermen approaching from shore he thought they were coming to do me no good so he fired several bursts until they hoisted a white flag and waved it frantically."

"Bill fired once more just to make completely sure they were intimidated and then he had to leave for home because his gas was running low," Rauth added.

They Were Glad to See Him

"When those fishermen reached me they grabbed me like a long lost brother. They hugged me and kissed me and one produced a towel and some dry trousers and melons."

The young flight officer said his rescuers, one of whom spoke English, made him hide out of sight as they landed and his English-speaking Samaritan posed as the airman himself to a detachment of Italian soldiers who came down to the water's edge to take him in custody.

"The soldiers treated the fisherman kindly until they discovered his hoax and then they threatened to shoot him," Rauth said.

Gave Pilot His Shirt

"I could not stand for that so I stepped up and made myself known. One of the soldiers took off his shirt and gave it to me and an officer who had gone to school in Brooklyn asked me some questions, including whether I had been treated well. They gave me food and water and nothing happened until 3 p. m. when news came Trapani was to be shelled."

"I went with the Italian officers to their command post in an old quarry and when the shelling started they gave me a pair of binoculars so I could watch the show. When the battle was over they handed their guns to me and surrendered.

"We went down the road and I found some American parachute troops who took the Italians into custody. They included one lieutenant colonel, one major, two captains, four lieutenants and 27 enlisted men," Rauth concluded.

Annihilation U. S. Aim, Says Nazi Official

By the Associated Press

Dr. Paul Schmidt, head of the press department in the German foreign office, said yesterday that President Roosevelt's speech last night convinced him that "Washington's sole aim is annihilation of the national existence of the big European powers and their allies."

The Nazi official's comment, the first German reaction to the speech, was broadcast by the Berlin radio and recorded by the Associated Press in New York.

"The whole talk of fighting for humanity and democracy against fascism and national socialism was nothing but pretext and camouflage," he said, remarking that the war against Italy was continuing despite the death of fascism. "This fight can only end with total annihilation or total victory."

He termed the President's charge that Germany failed to give Italy sufficient military help a "clumsy lie" and said such statements gave the German people a "hearty laugh."

Yanks Make Further Advances on Munda; Enemy's Supply Cut 'To Very Bone'

By the Associated Press

Allied Headquarters in the Southwest Pacific (Friday), July 30. Gen. Douglas MacArthur announced today that American troops have made further advances on the Japanese airbase at Munda, New Georgia, and declared the campaign against the strategic position in the central Solomons was progressing satisfactorily and according to plan.

The enemy's supply has been cut to the very bone by ceaseless pounding from the air and sea, he said.

A spokesman at General MacArthur's headquarters said the new advance had carried the Americans to within 1900 yards of the airdrome—a gain of 200 yards since Tuesday. It was a substantial advance, inasmuch as the Japanese are defending stubbornly every inch against the attacking soldiers and Marines.

Meanwhile, further details of an air attack on Japanese shipping off Cape Gloucester, New Britain, Wednesday and Thursday, disclosed that one enemy destroyer had been sunk. Another destroyer and a transport, which previously had been reported burning fiercely after being attacked by bombers, were beached.

"Two of 11 enemy fighters endeavoring to protect the convoy were shot down," the communique said. "The following morning our bombers again attacked an demolished the grounded destroyer.

"The other vessel was observed beached and still burning and has become a wreck.

"Escorting fighters shot down an enemy reconnaissance plane. The enemy's total loss amounted to 2 destroyers and 1 transport sunk or destroyed and 3 planes shot down."

Salamaua, the large Japanese base on Huon Gulf, New Guinea, was subjected to a concentrated attack by Allied medium and heavy bombers which placed 94 tons of fragmentation and demolition bombs on enemy installations in 17 minutes.

Sharp ground fighting broke out at Bobdubi, 5 miles southwest of Salamaua, and in the area northeast of Tambu Bay.

Precise low-level bombing of the Japanese in the jungles just 50 yards from American troops is helping to soften the enemy's defenses around Munda.

Daily, since the present drive started on June 30, the communiques from Gen. Douglas MacArthur's headquarters have reported the bombing of the Japanese at Munda.

Lodge Tells Story

J. Norman Lodge, Associated Press correspondent with the invasion forces just outside of Munda, tells the other part as follows:

"The troops got a thrill in the dawn air strike in which our planes laid the prettiest pattern bombing imaginable. High altitude heavies laid eggs on every square yard of ground occupied by the Japanese. Then the dive bombers came in.

"These boys, who deserve a special niche in America's heart, peeled off and dove down to within an unbelievable nearness to the ground before pulling out and dropping their eggs. That was necessary because hardly 50 yards separated the attack from the defense and the slightest error of judgment would have caused casualties among our own troops.

"But we incurred none, so great was the accuracy with which the bombing was done."

Patterson Defends P-40 Planes

Acting Secretary of War Patterson yesterday defended the reputation of the Curtiss-Wright Warhawk P-40 fighter planes and cited a recent dispatch from Maj. Gen. Claire L. Chennault to prove how valuable are the planes.

Patterson said the dispatch reported Warhawks escorting bombers in an attack on Hankow shot down at least 14 and probably 31 enemy fighters, including some of a new type at a cost of one Warhawk.

Appraisals Quoted

His discussion of plane performance came as part of a war review presented to his press conference, and it carried an unmistakable reference to the recent declaration by the Senate Truman Committee that the Warhawks though "useable" were at best a "second choice," of American and British and Russian forces.

Senator Wallgren (Democrat) of Washington, chairman of the investigating subcommittee which prepared the aircraft report, was on the West Coast, and was not reached for comment on Patterson's statement.

Patterson told reporters: "You will recall from time to time that criticism has been made of our P-40 pursuit planes."

He said he had noticed the dispatch from General Chennault, former leader of the Fighting Tigers, from China the day before.

Stillwell's Views

Patterson said the dispatch was "characteristic of the reports that we have received on combats with P-40s since the beginning of the war.

"I will just give you this little indication of what a 'poor' plane that really is!" he said, and read it.

As quoted by Patterson the dispatch said:

"A small force of bombers escorted by 12 P-40's successfully bombed Hankow. On their return they were engaged by enemy fighters, including some of a new type; 14, probably 31, of the enemy were shot down for a loss of 1 P-40."

"That," said Patterson, "is the plane some of the critics say is worthless."

He also quoted Lieut. Gen. Joseph Stillwell in China as having consistently said "give me P-40's and I will warrant you that I will shoot down 12 Zeros for every P-40 I lose."

In recent raids on Kiska Island, the Army Warhawk planes have been used both as fighters and as bombers, according to official communiques, and the plane has also been mentioned in a number of actions in the far Pacific.

Industry Reaches Leveling-Off Point In War Output

By Karl R. Bauman
Associated Press Staff Writer

America's merchant shipbuilding program has reached the leveling off stage, and thus becomes the first of the major war efforts to achieve a production rate approximating its ultimate goal.

The shipbuilding graph will swing slightly upward in the last half of this year, and settle back a little in 1944, but the change from the present rate of production will not be substantial, on the basis of overall figures.

Sub Situation Better

President Roosevelt's announcement Wednesday night that next year's goal calls for 21 million deadweight tons—carrying capacity—of merchant shipping was interpreted yesterday as reflecting marked improvement recently in the submarine situation.

Present facilities, worked to their utmost and provided with ample steel and labor, could exceed that output by several million tons. The Maritime Commission has estimated potential capacity of present yards at about 25 million tons.

To reach this year's goal of 19 million tons, shipyards must deliver nearly 11 million tons in the final six months, a rate slightly higher than necessary to meet next year's objective.

June production—168 vessels totaling 1,676,500 dead weight tons—was at an annual rate exceeding 20 million tons.

In the first half of 1943, 879 ships aggregating 8,818,622 deadweight tons were delivered into service compared with 746 ships of 8,089,732 tons in all of 1942.

Next year's program will center on faster, harder-to-build vessels than the mass production Liberty ship, partly on the theory that the faster freighters will be more suitable for postwar competitive times.

The Victory ship, successor to the Liberty, will go into production in the spring, with yards shifting to it throughout the rest of the year. With a speed of 15 to 17 knots, the Victory is several knots faster than the Liberty, and there is little difference in the carrying capacity.

Japan Realizes Value of Shipping

New York, July 29 (AP).—The Tokyo radio told the Japanese people today that it was "absolutely essential" that Japan concentrate on shipbuilding if she hoped to capitalize on the rich resources of conquered areas, the Office of War Information reported.

Lack of shipping "determined the fate of Germany in the first World War," the broadcast warned, pointing out that lack of transport facilities prevents the shipping of products from Java, Borneo, Burma and other occupied areas to Japan.

gested areas in order to clear the way for these vehicles."

The letter also called attention to Mason's statement that the request only applied to fire equipment and not police cars or ambulances.

Mason, who wrote to Lewis in his capicity as acting president of the Board of Commissioners, had requested a "reconsideration of their request, heretofore orally made, that the fire apparatus of the District Fire Department be permitted to use sirens where such use is not in simulation in any respect of the air-raid-warning signals."

Referring to the accident, Mason said in his letter to Lewis:

"There seems to be a consensus of opinion among investigators of both the Fire and Police Departments that the driver of the moving van, with which the truck collided, did not hear the warning device, a bell, on the truck.

"The van was moving on a green light, but under our regulations must stop on the audible signals of the fire apparatus when same is heard in order to give the latter the right of way at light controlled intersections."

On February 11 the Commissioners had issued a directive to the Police and Fire Departments to discontinue the use of sirens in compliance with paragraph 5 of the Army's air raid protection regulations.

This directive was based on the wording of the paragraph which stated:

"No person shall order, utter, publish, sound, or otherwise simulate or cause to be ordered, uttered, published, sounded, or otherwise simulated, any air raid warning-signal . . ."

Mason said that the Commissioners did not see how sirens could be used on emergency equipment without simulating the noise of an air raid siren.

Lewis contended that the order did not entirely prohibit the use of the sirens, but only so far as they might be confused with air raid signals.

"Possibly we have erred," Mason said, "but we have erred in our administrative judgment. We have tried to work closely with General Lewis and we have always appreciated the cooperation which we have received from him."

Fire Department officials said that it would take three or four days to get all of the sirens back in working order. They said it would not be necessary to purchase any new equipment, since all apparatus had been equipped with sirens at the time of the order. Some fire trucks, they said, would begin using the sirens immediately.

Mason made it plain that if the resumed use of sirens causes confusion with air-raid warning signals he again would order their use discontinued.

BACKACHE, LEG PAINS MAY BE DANGER SIGN
Of Tired Kidneys

If backache and leg pains are making you miserable, don't just complain and do nothing about them. Nature may be warning you that your kidneys need attention.

The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking excess acids and poisonous waste out of the blood. They help most people pass about 3 pints a day.

If the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters don't work well, poisonous waste matter stays in the blood. These poisons may start nagging backaches, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness. Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning sometimes shows there is something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from the blood. Get Doan's Pills.

Navy Plans Big Boost In WAVES

Plans to swel lthe strength of the WAVES to 91,000 by the end of 1944 were announced yesterday by the Navy, as it reported that the Women's Naval Auxiliary, by taking over shore jobs, already has released enough officers and bluejackets to man a major task force.

Just a year old today, with the demand for their services multiplying and the variety of their assignments increasing, the WAVES now number 27,000, or nearly triple the enrollment anticipated by the Navy when President Roosevelt signed the act creating the organization July 30, 1942.

King Praises Reserve

Admiral Ernest J. King, commander in chief of the United States Fleet and chief of naval operations, summing up the measure of their achievement, said:

"The expectations of the Navy in you have been justified by your hard work and sincere dedication to duty. You who are members of Women's Reserve have won the respect of the naval service by your acceptance of military requirements, readiness for responsibility and already valuable contribution to the work of winning the war."

Of the 27,000 WAVES now on duty, about 10,000 are still in training. The largest group is in Washington, with more than 3000 officers and enlisted women billeted in the office of the Commander in Chief, United States Fleet, and the Chief of Naval operations. Approximately 2000 more are on duty in other offices of the Navy Department.

Officers in charge of shore establishments, attaches explained, are requesting more and more uniformed women for assignment in their offices.

Force Greatly Expanded

When the Women's Reserve was established, plans called for 1000 officers and 10,000 enlisted women.

Today, the 16 training schools for enlisted women and the Naval Reserve Midshipmen's school for officers have a combined capacity for training more than that number at one time, the Navy says, adding.

"What was originally planned to be mostly an office force has expanded into gunnery and blind flying instruction, aerology, aviation ground crew work, navigation and other fields.

"In addition, there are large numbers serving in Navy communications, one of the first fields in which it was recognized that trained women could replace Navy men. Other large numbers are also doing office work and in time to come, they will probably replace all enlisted men serving in such billets at shore stations in continental United States."

WLB Restores Authority to Industry Units

The War Labor Board restored authority to five subordinate industry boards yesterday after approving a legal opinion interpreting the Connally-Smith Antistrike Act as authorizing labor members to serve in cases involving their own national organizations.

The industry boards—four commissions and one panel—were stripped of authority on July 3 pending a legal study because of a clause in the antistrike law providing "no member of the board shall be permitted to participate in any decision in which such members has a direct interest as an officer, employe, or representative of either party to the dispute."

Opinion Approved

The power of the industry boards was questioned because they are composed of employers from the industry and union representatives from the unions involved in the industry's labor disputes. They include the nonferrous metals, West Coast lumber, trucking, and Detroit tool and die commissions and the newspaper industry panel.

A formal opinion signed by Lloyd K. Garrison, general counsel, and approved unanimously by the board found Congress did not intend to change the structure of the board or its subordinate agencies when it wrote the law.

Under the rules outlined by Garrison, labor members should be disqualified when they are officers, employes, or members of a local union involved in a dispute, when they represent an international union party to a dispute, or when they acted for the union involved before the dispute was certified.

Applies to All Groups

Industry members should be disqualified when they are officers or employes of a party to a dispute, members of an unincorporated association which is a party, officers or employes of a trade association party to a dispute, or acting as agent, member of board of directors or trustee of a party before the board.

It wa emphasized nothing in the at prevents A. F. of L. and C. I. O. officials from sitting on cases involving the A. F. of L. or C. I. O., nor blocking members of the National Association of Manufacturers or the United States Chamber of Commerce from acting in cases involving N. A. M. or C. of C. members.

WLB stated it had not determined the status of its shipbuilding commission. Its war shipping panel which was created on July 14 will be continued on an advisory basis for the time being.

Biddle Opinion Asked on When Coal Mines Must Be Returned

Attorney General Francis Biddle yesterday was tossed another "hot potato" stemming out of the Connally-Smith Antistrike Act—the question "When does the law require the Government to return the coal mines to their owners?"

Secretary of Interior Harold L. Ickes revealed that Warner Gardner, Interior Department solicitor, had prepared a memorandum on the subject which was being referred to Biddle for an opinion.

The act requires that the mines be returned to their owners as soon as practicable, but in any event within 60 days after prestrike productive efficiency is restored to the mines.

One of the questions raised in Gardner's memorandum is whether the more than 3500 Government-seized mines should be returned to their owners piecemeal, or all at once, Ickes said.

Ickes said he had "a feeling that the coal miners are not mining as much coal as they can produce."

Ickes also pointed out that the mines were now producing coal at the rate of 12,100,000 tons a week, compared to a prestrike average of 12,500,000 tons a week. Because of the strike, however, Government schedules now call for 13 million tons a week for the rest of the year, Ickes said.

The Secretary of Interior indicated that the mines might have to adopt a universal eight-hour day, instead of the present seven-hour day, to meet production goals. A contract which the United Mine Workers signed recently with the Illinois coal operators provides for an eight-hour day and 48-hour week, compared with the present six-day, 42-hour week. The contract comes before the War Labor Board for review next Tuesday.

Ponders Strike Law Question

Biddle has already been asked by the National Labor Relations Board to determine whether minority unions have the right to file strike notices under the antistrike law.

The country's coal operators have been pressing for a return of their mines, and the War Labor Board has expressed the belief that the mines should be returned as soon as possible as a means of obtaining compliance with its order to Lewis, outlining the terms of private mine operation.

Lewis has refused to accept these terms, but has agreed to keep the mines in operation for the Government until October 31, this year. If the mines are returned to their owners and the coal miners strike, the Government would then be free to apply sanctions provided in the act.

The Department of Interior has maintained that it will return the mines to their owners as soon as possible, but it has been extremely chary of any action which might precipitate another general coal strike.

Garner's memorandum, it was understood, did not take any stand on the question of returning the mines, but raised the various questions which the Department of Interior would like answered.

Ford, 80 Today, Stresses Industry

we always found that we had enough.

"Money is just a part of a practical life—it saves time in exchanging goods—and is no good for anything else. People who desire to live off money, thinking that money is wealth, easily become parasites. . . . We never believed that we could be prosperous alone. Real prosperity is prosperity for all."

Only industry, Ford said, can abolish poverty.

"It can give the only social security human beings can know—the security of being able to produce what they need," he added.

Dynamite Explosion Rocks California City

Redding, Calif., July 29 (AP).—Ten tons of dynamite stored at the Hornet mine 8 miles west of here on Iron Mountain exploded today rocking the city of Redding and slightly injuring two men.

The mine itself was undamaged. Windows were broken and a corrugated roof was torn off the mill. The blast carved a shallow crater of about 40 feet in diameter.

Yanks Dump Bombs on Kiel U-Boat Slips

By the Associated Press

London (Friday), July 30.—British-based bombers swept eastward across the English Channel late last night and Reuters reported that alerts had sounded later in the Lugano area in Switzerland, suggesting the possibility that targets in northern Italy were under attack.

The night thrust followed heavy daylight attacks on the U-boat slips at Kiel and the Heinkel aircraft factory at Warnemuende by strong formations of American Flying Fortresses, which fought their way through swarms of Nazi fighters, more than 30 of which were reported shot down.

"Good bombing results were observed on both targets," the U. S. Army headquarters communique said. Ten heavy American bombers were lost.

"Fairly strong fighter opposition was encountered by the unescorted Fortresses at Kiel, but there was little opposition at Warnemuende," the bulletin added. "Preliminary claims totaled more than 30 enemy fighters destroyed by the bombers."

200 Since Saturday

Brig. Gen. Frederick L. Anderson, chief of the Eighth Air Force Bomber Command, declared: "The battle of Germany is swinging in our favor."

General Anderson said that more than 200 German fighters had been destroyed since Saturday in addition to many more probably destroyed or damaged.

Returning crewmen said the fight-flying bombers encountered most of their opposition on the homeward flight, the Nazis attacking in great packs. In addition to a hefty load of bombs, the Fortresses also carried propaganda leaflets.

American Thunderbolts, R. A. F. Dominion and Allied Spitfires supported the big target-busters part of the way to and from Germany, and Canadian fighters knocked down three German planes.

Late today Boston and Typhoon bombers attacked a power station near Rouen and an airfield at Mervinne in France, and United States medium bombers struck an airfield at Fortruge near St. Omer. Escorting Norwegian Spitfire pilots knocked down two enemy fighters.

From these subsidiary operations three Allied fighters were missing.

Some of the Fortress crews missing from previous raids over northern Germany have been rescued, the Air Ministry said tonight.

49 Americans Rescued

At least 49 Americans were picked up from the North Sea and landed in England in the 50 hours ending the evening of July 27.

The ministry said that more than 200 British aircraft as well as American planes searched by day and night for crews of lost planes and guarded dinghies and lifeboats from enemy interference in the greatest air-sea rescue operations of the war.

Most of the rescued airmen were more than 100 miles from England when found. One crew of nine Americans was saved by a lifeboat dropped by parachute only 60 miles from the German-held Danish coast.

Another crew of mine had been picked up by a foreign trawler which headed for the European coast. But the guns of a British Halifax "persuaded" the trawler to turn about and go to England, the ministry said.

The double assault was the fifth in six days by United States heavy bombers and followed raids yesterday in which Flying Fortresses flew unescorted to within 80 miles of Berlin and battered the aircraft factory at Oschersleben among other targets. They flew about 50 miles farther to hit Warmuende today.

The bombers were less numerous than the great fleets that have shattered Hamburg and Essen in three nights this week with four times the 1500 tons the Luftwaffe dropped on all Britain in the first six months of this year.

The Air Ministry news service, contrasting the Allied raids against Germany with the attacks on Britain during the week ended at dawn Wednesday, said the R. A. F. bomber command dropped "some 7000 tons of bombs upon Hamburg, Essen and other targets in Germany alone with an average loss of less than 3 per cent of the bombers engaged" in those seven days and nights.

The Luftwaffe in the same period lost 15 per cent of the small force that crossed the coast of Britain, and German bombs failed to inflict a casualty and caused "only the most trivial damage," the news service said.

In the same week, R. A. F. fighters made "some 2000" day and night sorties and destroyed 33 aircraft at a cost of 21.

President's Veteran Plan Applauded

in Congress, and those which are not, such as mustering-out pay, were expected to be quickly accommodated by committees vying for jurisdiction. At least two of the points will involve amendments to the Social Security Act. Some legislators said a fight was likely to develop against any effort to use these to drive through the Administration's broadened civilian social security program, but anticipated no opposition to equal social security and unemployment insurance rights for veterans.

"Doesn't Go Far Enough"

Fairly typical of how Congress felt about soldier legislation was a statement by Senator Revercomb (Republican) of West Virginia, who said the President's program "is very good as far as it goes, but it does not go far enough."

Revercomb said it is the business of the Government to see that returning veterans not only get discharge pay, job training and job insurance if they need it, "but actually get permanent employment."

"Jobs for these men are the first consideration of Government," he said, "and we've got to plan our economy so they will be here waiting for them, either in private industry or in Government."

Representative R. Ewing Thomason of Texas, ranking Democratic member of the House Military Affairs Committee, pointed out that an amendment by his group to the Selective Service Act already gives each selectee first call on his old job, "but we've got to provide for those who don't get them back."

Other Indorsements

Thomason said he thought the President had presented "a pretty broad program, but I'm in favor of it." He said he had no doubt that if the legislation is referred to the Military Committee "we will go right ahead on it in the fall."

Representative Wesley E. Disney (Democrat) of Oklahoma, a ranking member of the Ways and Means Committee which will consider social security phases of the program, said: "I'm in favor of any legislation that takes care of our returning veterans after the war."

Indorsing all points, Representative Sol Bloom (Democrat) of New York said he was sure the President meant the benefits should apply to all women's auxiliary services as well as men in the armed forces and merchant marine.

The office of Senator Elmer Thomas ((Democrat) of Oklahoma, who led the last Senate fight for the World War I bonus, said Thomas "will work for and support any liberal veteran's legislation."

Senate Republicans Taft of Ohio and Davis of Pennsylvania observed that many of the points have been covered by bills passed or pending.

Said Senator Taft: "I don't know how much good this will do the President politically because Congress has always been more generous to war veterans than the President. Congress already has provided for hospitalization and compensation and has greatly expanded the provisions for vocational rehabilitation for returning servicemen."

Senator Guffey ((Democrat) of Pennsylvania indorsed all of the points down the line and forecast their early approval.

G. O. P. Attacks President's Speech

of the campaign to pacify the home front before the next election."

Senator Bridges (Republican) of New Hampshire, said that when President Roosevelt was dangling Government benefits before men and women in uniform "you could almost hear him telling them not to forget in November, 1944, who it was that offered to give them a lot of new, free things."

In the next year, Bridges said, "we must distinguish between Mr. Roosevelt speaking as Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces . . . and Roosevelt the candidate for a fourth term."

Chairman Spangler in a telegram to Secretary of War Stimson, Secretary of the Navy Knox, and Robert Sherwood, head of the overseas division of OWI said:

"Last night over world-wide radio President Roosevelt launched his campaign for a fourth and perhaps continuing term in the White House. Under the pretext of a major report on the war situation, he made a straight-out political speech and a bold bid for the vote of our soldiers and sailors who are risking their lives for freedom.

Dangers to Democracy

"You will appreciate, I am sure, the dangers to our democratic institutions of the Commander in Chief stooping to this type of politics among those who instead of thinking of him as a cunning political leader should have confidence that he is thinking only of winning the war, getting them back home quickly and at work in jobs with opportunity ahead. . . .

"Not Political Serfs"

"These boys and girls as thinking citizens should not be made political serfs. They are entitled to all sides of all questions so that they can make up their minds how they will vote next year.

"A number of members of Congress, including Senator Bridges of New Hampshire and Representative Ditter of Pennsylvania and newspaper writers have already pointed out the political implications of the President's speech.

"I therefore formally request of you that these comments be just as wiely distributed to our armed forces as it is possible through the facilities at your command. I request that they be published, with the President's statements, in the Army newspapers and the ships' bulletins. I request that they be communicated immediately through your news communication channels to our troops overseas."

Statement by Ditter

Representative Ditter of Pennsylvania, chairman of the Republican National Congressional Committee, issued a statement saying:

"The White House announced to the Nation and to the world that the President would make a 'major speech.' Instead it degenerated into the official opening of the fourth-term campaign, aimed at the millions of men and women in uniforms. Other than the vote appeal there was nothing in the speech that we had not already read in newspapers, except the ending of the coffee rationing, and that hardly justified a presidential announcement.

"It is dangerous to our democratic institutions when the President commandeers radio time to speak politics to our sons and daughters overseas while they are not permitted to hear the opposition."

Ten Thousand Crop Workers Needed in Va.

Ten thousand harvest workers will be needed in Virginia to gather the tomato, peach and apple crop from August 1 through October, K. Vernon Banta, United States Employment Service director here announced yesterday. Most of the workers must be recruited from Washington.

"This is an actual result of a survey on the grounds, conducted by John Jones of the District of Columbia USES office," Banta said. The survey was completed yesterday.

Every type of worker is needed, Banta explained, in urging Government workers, school students and teachers and others planning vacations to forego their usual time off plans this year.

"If sacrifice is not made among this group," he said, "we stand to lose a great part of the harvest, all of which is vitally needed to aid the war effort."

Fifty harvesters already have been supplied in the area surrounding Timberville, Woodstock, Newmarket and Harrisonburg to help with the tomato harvest; 100 additional will be needed from the present to August 15; from August 15 to September 1 from 400 to 500 will be needed, according to Jones.

Tomato pickers are to be in demand until around August 15, after which peach harvesters for the Shenandoah Valley area will be needed until September 20. From mid-September until November 30 the apple crop will be harvested, he explained.

Banta urged that potential workers contact the Employment Center, 801 K Street Northwest, either by telephone or in person.

Donn Tucker Of Chevy Chase Cited 3 Times

In the thought that parents can best convey the triumphs of their offspring, The Post prints the story of Donn Tucker just as it came to the newsroom from the boy's father; a veteran Washington newspaperman.

By Ray Tucker

Donn Tucker has been awarded the Air Medal with one Oak Leaf Cluster, and he has been cited for a second bunch of ivy, according to word received here yesterday by his parents and the War Department.

Young Tucker is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Ray Tucker of 6308 Hillcrest Place, Chevy Chase, Md. His father has been a Washington newspaperman for almost 20 years.

Donn was a third-year student at the University of Virginia when the Japs attacked at Pearl Harbor. He wanted to quit school immediately, and enter the armed forces, but his father persuaded him to finish his semiannual course. Then he resigned immediately and tried to become a pilot. Because of delinquent eyesight he missed that job, but he qualified as a radio operator and a waist gunner. He trained, mainly, at Camp Keesler Field, Biloxi, Miss., and Scott Field, Mo.

Saw Horrors of War

He sailed for England last September and saw the horrors of war on the way over.

Tucker finished his gunnery training in England and accompanied the Eisenhower expedition to North Africa. He has been in action on that front since the day after Christmas, 1942. He is the radio operator and waist gunner on the two-engined ship known as the Marauder, supposedly a dangerous ship but, according to Technical Sergt. Tucker, the "finest plane for beating the Axis in the skies."

Donn, according to his recent letters, has been engaged in operations over Sicily and Italy, and it is understood that he was on one of the ships which plastered Rome. He was probably chosen because he is a Catholic.

Fear Flak More

His latest letter suggests that American fliers fear flak more than enemy fighters. Donn has been going on unnecessary and unassigned fighting missions in the hope that he might build up a score which would permit him to return home for a furlough next fall. He has not had leave since his family put him on a Greyhound bus on New York Avenue on March 10, 1942. On one particular strip the American fliers apparently had tough going. Wrote Young Tucker:

"This was not my particular ship, Dad. But the boys had painted a luscious, blond nude on the nose. And the first antiaircraft shell shot her rear end off. Those German gunners must have been using high-powered telescopes."

Donn was born in New Rochelle, N. Y., on July 5, 1921, but he came here with his parents in 1924. He was graduated from the Bethesda-Chevy Chase High School in 1939, and would have graduated from the U. of V. in 1942 except for the war. He was well known in local circles as a Golden Gloves boxer for the National Guard, and he was on the cross-county team at Charlottesville. Now, all he wants is to come home—toute suite!

Driver Makes 'Em 'Move Back;' Stops Car Till Riders Obey

Capital car No. 1004 was speeding west on the 30 line yesterday.

The car was crowded. Sweltering humans filled the front section, spilled over the white forbidden line. As usual there was plenty of room in the rear.

For blocks the driver intoned with rising impatience: "Move back in the car, please! Mo..oo..ove ba..aa..a..ack. Please! The "please" was inflectively underlined.

Those in front did not stir. Each one looked self-consciously into space, or half accusingly at others.

Then the car was stopped between loading zones. The driver left his controls, stood up and in tense but precise English addressed the startled passengers.

"Folks, your attention, please. As you may have noticed, this car is now at rest in the middle of the block. It is not going to move from here, not until those standing heedlessly in front shake their hunkers and move to the rear.

"You are informed that the rear section goes where the front section does. It stops at the same instant as the front. Now, folks," he asked with complete finality, "what'll it be? Park here for the rest of the afternoon or shall we move back."

Led by a grinning naval commander, the front-enders beat a retreat to the rear. The car started again and sped smoothly westward.

Eisenhower's Plea

The message which Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, supreme Allied commander in the Mediterranean, broadcast to the people of Italy will enormously increase peace sentiment in that country. For within the framework of unconditional surrender, General Eisenhower offers the Italians very powerful inducements to lay down their arms. First and foremost is his pledge that if Allied prisoners in Italy are turned over and not allowed to fall into the hands of the Germans, all Italian prisoners captured in Sicily and Tunisia will be returned to Italy. It is easy to imagine what this will mean to hundreds of thousands of Italian families, some of whom haven't seen their fathers and brothers and sons for years.

Secondly, General Eisenhower has assured the Italians that, once their country has made peace with the Allies, the ancient liberties and traditions of Italy will be restored. Precisely that has occurred, he pointed out, in those parts of Sicily now under Allied control. And, thirdly, the Allied commander in chief has informed the people of Italy that the Allies are prepared to rid Italy of the Germans, a people the Italians detest but on whose side, thanks to Mussolini, they have been fighting for more than three years. It is a safe bet that General Eisenhower's plea will not go unheeded. Events in Italy are moving toward a new climax.

In fact, the only question that can be raised regarding the wisdom of General Eisenhower's plea is that we propose to treat Italy as a prodigal son on whose behalf we plan to kill the fatted calf. For getting out of a war which, after all, they supported as long as there was a chance of their winning, the Italians will be rewarded by all manner of special concessions. The real fact is that we cannot grant Italians their freedom. We can only help create a situation in which they can win it for themselves. The Italians must not be deluded into the belief that if they make peace with us Italy will be out of the war and in a position to enjoy the fruits of peace. They can only enjoy the fruits of peace if the war is won, so that it is to their interests to help bring about the downfall of Germany. If that fact isn't made plain to them, we may be in for a lot of trouble. Aside from this reservation, General Eisenhower's plea ought to be productive of nothing but good.

Same Pattern

Running true to form, President Roosevelt has intervened to reopen a labor dispute involving the employes of the Pacific Electric Interurban lines. The men are aggrieved because Judge Vinson, Director of Economic Stabilization, allowed them only a 3-cent-an-hour wage increase instead of the 13 cents recommended by an emergency fact-finding board. As a result, a one-day strike occurred in Los Angeles, and another strike was only averted by the President's decision to set up a new board to assist Judge Vinson in a reexamination of the case. Obviously the appointment of this board, ostensibly for the purpose of reexamining the issues in dispute and studying local conditions, simply provides cover for a face-saving retreat by the Administration, instigated by pressure from labor leaders. For Judge Vinson has already rendered a decision that was presumed to be final, in accordance with the orders to hold the line against inflation.

The Los Angeles strikers can hardly be blamed if they conclude that the strike weapon still remains the best kind of argument for wage increases. Certainly it pays to be defiant if a refusal to abide by the decisions of the Administration's accredited representatives brings concessions instead of punishment for violation of strike bans. By yielding to pressure from union representatives in this instance, the President not only has undermined Judge Vinson's position, but he has dealt another blow to the much battered WLB which refused to permit the Los Angeles Electric Railway Co. to boost the wages of its employes 10 cents per hour. Moreover, he is probably paving the way for Nation-wide concessions to railway labor that are not warranted under the "Little Steel" formula.

The situation in Los Angeles emphasizes the necessity of close teamwork among the various agencies handling wage disputes. For it is patently inequitable and infeasible to grant wage increases to one group of transit employes while denying comparable increases to another group in the same locality. Consistency of treatment is indispensable to assure public support for any official policy designed to regulate wage payments.

Apparently the stage is being set for a general retreat from the hold-the-line wage order and substitution of a so-called compromise standard—another name for wage increases not warranted under the "Little Steel" formula. However, any sort of compromise formula that could be devised will afford a very temporary protection against wage inflation if the President continues to encourage labor to grasp for more, in disregard of the restrictions that he himself has approved.

Among The Allies

A variety of explanations have been offered for the setting up in Moscow of a National Committee of Free Germany. But two facts stand out in painful relief. One is that the committee could not function without the prior approval of the Soviet government. This implied stamp of approval is made concrete by the amount of space which Pravda gave to the development. Equally disturbing is the second fact that this Administration was not apprised of it. The conclusion is inescapable that the Allies do not seem to have begun even an approach to a meeting of minds on what shall be done to a defeated Germany.

Doubtless common agreement about Germany is impossible because nobody can foretell the situation in which the Allies will find Germany for their dispositions. What is disquieting is that on the day of victory the Allies may not be able to rely upon a habit of consultation. The British and the Americans, by assiduous quest, have arrived at a likemindedness in the conduct of the war which is remarkably exemplified in Sicily. What explains this evolution? Nothing but the constant contact which has been maintained by President Roosevelt and Mr. Churchill. Our President has sought a similar contact with Marshal Stalin, but without success. It is said that the man in the Kremlin wants acts instead of words, but no action of any sort can be put into effect without prior planning.

The weakness of the liaison between Moscow and the other Allied capitals is altogether deplorable. In peace and in war cooperation with Soviet Russia is taken for granted in Washington and London. It is certainly impossible to win a war of coalition smoothly as well as quickly without it. Yet the Soviet will not provide even information with which our military staff could form an estimate of the military situation inside Russia. American planes are not even allowed to carry lend-lease aid to Russia because the pilots might see too much. With such suspicion rampant, with the constant needling from Moscow for "a second front" at a time when our air power is completely undermining Germany's ability to wage war, the war effort is retarded. And, since all relations are necessarily based on good faith, the peace itself could easily be jeopardized. Cooperation must be spelled out in order to be thoroughly effective in winning both war and peace.

Doubtless the Allies have not done enough to melt this Muscovite suspicion. To be sure, the President has often essayed to meet the Soviet leader. But we must bear in mind that the record of the Allies before the war furnished enough foundation for Soviet suspicion. There was the sellout at Munich. From then on the Soviet decided never again to rely upon security undertaken in common, but to pursue an independent policy. This is still the case, despite the mutual reliance for defeating the common enemy. It is probably justified in Moscow's eyes by a number of events: the Austrian battalion, the tortuous and devious policy in North Africa, Mr. Eden's alleged role in this country as expositor of Soviet aims, the visit of Giraud, and the Roosevelt-Churchill independent demarche to Italy. Soviet interests seem to have been forgotten in every instance. Perhaps, in view of this separation in our wartime diplomacy, this separation in our warmaking, save through lend-lease, it is no wonder that Moscow so far refuses to commit herself in act and word to a return to collective security.

However, both Russia and her Allies must realize it would be ruinous for everybody if the attitude of the victors after the war were nothing more elevated than an "every nation for itself" attitude. This war is destined to restore world law and order. But if the incident in Moscow is any guide, that destiny still seems like a will o' th' wisp.

Shavian Truth

A good deal of Mr. George Bernard Shaw's reputation as a wit has come out of his ability to state the obvious in very obvious language. Evidently he has not lost this ability with age. When on the recent occasion of his eighty-seventh birthday he observed that control of the sea—and he might have added control of air—has, as a result of the war, passed to the United States he stated a point that seems to be mathematically demonstrable. When he said that the future of Britain as a world power will depend upon how expertly she can maintain her balance between Russia in the east and America in the west he was saying something that must be perfectly apparent to the British statesmen themselves. Finally, when he said that the guarantees of the Atlantic Charter are, so far, no more than "highfalutin abstract phrases" he was merely putting his finger on a weakness which is certainly characteristic of Americans and is probably characteristic of the British, too. That is a readiness to assent to any set of general principles, provided they are couched in sufficiently vague and lofty language and provided no effort is made to apply them in specific instances.

Possibly this is the characteristic that Latins and others have in mind when they speak of "Anglo-Saxon hypocrisy." This is a misnomer, since hypocrisy, by definition, is a conscious simulation. The confusion arises from our inability or unwillingness to perceive that generalities and particulars have any relation whatever. It is probably significant that the word "casuistry," which means nothing more than the application of general moral principles to particular cases, has a very bad sound indeed in our ears.

The truth is that power, probably the greatest concentration of power the world has ever known, has come into our hands. It is true that we did not seek this power, that, as someone has said, our greatness has been thrust upon us. There were many among us who even sought to refuse what is apparently an inescapable historic destiny. Nevertheless, the rest of the world, including Mr. Shaw, is well aware of our power, and, as was inevitable, we are now becoming more and more conscious of it ourselves. While no historical analogy is ever perfect, our position in relation to the other nations of the globe (except Russia) will, at the end of this war, be approximately that of Rome to the Mediterranean world (except Parthia) at the end of the Punic wars.

It might be well at this point for us to consider that historical instances of the judicious exercise of overwhelming power are extremely rare. This may be the reason why paths of glory and of empire lead so often to historic graves. The great British historian, Lord Acton, was led into the generalization that all power inevitably corrupts. The great and long-neglected Swiss historian Burckhardt expressed the same conclusion in other words. "Power," said Burckhardt, "is of its nature evil." It may be the high historic mission of the United States to prove that great power can be employed without proportionately great abuse. But we cannot prove it merely by lofty words unimplemented by actions and certainly not by refusal to admit historical realities.

Demobilization Aid

In his Wednesday night address the President touched upon a matter of deep concern to the millions of men who are now in the armed services. Most of these men are too young to have had much personal experience of the hardships and humiliation of prolonged unemployment. A large number, in fact, are so young that they have never been employed at all. But, regardless of age or experience, men withdrawn from civilian life by the fortunes of war can hardly fail to wonder and worry about their personal fortunes in the postwar world. They ask anxiously how they are going to live while they are looking about for jobs. Some will ask how they are to find jobs after they have lost the skills that once made them useful. The President has outlined a plan of action which answers these and other questions. It is a minimum program which he rightly regards as the least to which demobilized members of the armed forces are entitled—such as adequate mustering-out pay, rights to unemployment benefits, vocational training, if needed, and, of course, special aid for the disabled.

A program of this kind is primarily designed to tide work-seekers over a difficult adjustment period. It assumes that jobs will eventually be found for the able-bodied. Whatever the cost, this kind of temporary aid should be regarded as an essential war outlay. Furthermore, Congress should promptly make sure that relief plans are ready when peace comes, instead of waiting, as the President says, "to do a hasty, inefficient and ill-considered job at the last moment."

At the same time it is well to remember that the program outlined by the President is not offered as a solution of the employment problems that will confront the country after the war. Millions of men and women in war industries will then be looking for new jobs, and many of these work-seekers will also have to be trained to exercise new skills suited to a peaceful environment. Thus, as the President pointed out, the placement of returning soldiers, sailors and marines is only part of the gigantic demobilization task ahead. To effect the changeover from a wartime to a peacetime economy will require enormous effort, and will call for imagination and planning skill of the highest order. Fortunately, the President realizes the enormity of the undertaking and gives assurance that plans are being worked out for submission to Congress.

Without plans for orderly conversion of industry to peacetime pursuits, soldiers and sailors would be no better off than their fellow citizens in a disorganized postwar world, after their mustering-out pay and their insurance benefits had been exhausted.

SEA CLIFFS

The ceaseless wind sings in gaunt architecture of these rocks,
Its solemn diapason coldly chants day-long,
night-long,
Above the turmoil of waters at this world's wild end,
song.

Upon dark towering cathedral columns of the cliffs
A tapestry of lichen spreads its flaming maze,
And on the ledge below, the wrack of casual waves is cast:
An offering of many tides, a legacy of days.

Here silent ghosts of unremembered mariners and ships
Now quietly regard the surf's cold crash and chime,
And here perhaps the minstrel sirens combed their gold-green hair
And sang upon these rocks in some forgotten time.

Postwar Problems

THE "MORONIC little King" incident is no momentary tempest. Understand it and you will get light upon problems and embarrassments facing us in the fighting in Europe from now on—and facing us even more seriously when and if we undertake a program of setting up new governments in Europe. In short, the present incident is a preglimpse of postwar—assuming we embark upon the particular kind of postwar program some persons say we should.

The immediate incident was this: On the day after Mussolini's fall, a radio broadcast went out from New York to Europe. The broadcast began: "This is the Voice of America." That statement was true. It was the official voice of America, for it was the Office of War Information, formally authorized to speak for America, and to carry on official American propaganda abroad. The voice told Europe what was, according to the voice, the opinion of America. In expressing this opinion, the voice quoted an American view which used the words "moronic little King."

INSTANTLY IT was apparent that this would make it difficult for us to deal with the King, and therefore would embarrass and might delay the achievement of peace with Italy. It might result in prolonging the fighting, the unnecessary loss of American lives. Hastily President Roosevelt disavowed the "Voice of America."

The incident was unfortunate also for reasons having to do with postwar settlement. By what the "Voice of America" said, America was taking sides among factions in Italy. There are in Italy some who believe in keeping the monarchy, others who believe in ending it. As between these groups, we might be interpreted as taking sides.

Further, there are in Italy at least five political parties, representing shades of theory about government and society. They range from Communist through Socialist, to conservative believers in parliamentary government and the right of individuals to own property, and including some who would like to preserve fascism. Each group has one view or another about monarchy and about the King. Among the groups, we would now be interpreted as taking sides on questions of political and social ideology.

The embarrassment of the present Italian incident will be better understood by recalling another, which erupted on the day General Eisenhower landed in North Africa. General Eisenhower supposed he had made an arrangement by which the French army in North Africa would permit the Americans to occupy the territory without opposition. But the arrangement missed fire. It turned out that the French soldiers would not obey an order unless it came from someone having official authority to give it. Such a someone would have to be a representative of the Vichy government, the only government the soldiers knew. The French resisted our occupation, fighting ensued, a number of French and American lives were lost.

IN THIS extremely embarrassing situation General Eisenhower received an extraordinary offer from a high Vichy official then in North Africa, Admiral Jean Darlan. Darlan said that he would order French troops and civilians not to resist the American occupation, that he would order them to cooperate with the Americans against the Axis forces whom General Eisenhower had to face.

General Eisenhower accepted the tender, of course. He accepted for a military reason, wholly. It would be and was to the immense advantage of our Army. It averted the loss of thousands of our soldiers, shortened the time required for our occupation of French North Africa. As a military decision, General Eisenhower's action was "one of the most profitable in history."

Yet in America arose outcry. It came from many and diverse varieties of thought. All ignored the military advantage of General Eisenhower's step. The outcry was based on policy and ideology. The incident showed that there are in America many who from various motives place ideology over immediate military advantage. Such groups and individuals have a right to their opinions. But they may embarrass the military conduct of the war. And after the war is won, the work of postwar settlement is likely to be made difficult by groups who have fixed and strong views about the kind of government and society that should be set up in European countries.

Organized Opposition

By Paul Schubert

Strength In Crisis

AT LAST the hour came. At last Italy's Fascist Party lost popular backing, as all parties sooner or later lose their following. Mussolini, once idolized, was through, and a successor had to be named, quickly. The alternative—anarchy.

In this hour of crisis, the Italians realized in all bitterness that Mussolini's greatest crime against the nation had been the setting up of one party government—the destruction of the organized political opposition. With fascism finished, there was no alternate political organization to take over the duties of government. The only stopgap was the army, governing by martial law under the shabby symbol of the crown.

Armies are not organized to govern countries. Martial law satisfies no one. Armies know the use of hand grenades and field artillery; understand forced marches, attack and retreat. They do not understand civil administration, civil justice, national economics, international diplomacy.

For more than 20 years the Fascists' great argument in favor of one party government had been the contention that political opposition meant national division—in other words, national weakness.

ONE PARTY government, they said, meant unity. A country with unity was twice as strong as a country divided into "government party" and "opposition party."

The Fascists pointed the finger of scorn at the democracies, calling them ineffectual, decadent debating societies, unable to fight wars, conquer foreign terrain, or do any other of the really glorious things possible to strong nations.

In the face of so much bombast, it was often hard to advance the premise that a nation is only as strong as its organized opposition. For when crisis comes, and the government has failed, then the entire burden of pulling the country through to better days rests upon the opposition's shoulders.

"Opposition"—

There's always opposition to the government. There was opposition to Mussolini in Italy, and there is opposition to Hitler in Germany—plenty of it. Neither Hitler nor Mussolini could eliminate opposition. The worse things went in Italy, the louder the opposition got, until in the last week before the crash they were demonstrating in the streets, crying out for peace—in Sicily they were greeting our invading armies as liberators, with shouts of "Down with the Duce!"

Hitler and Mussolini couldn't end opposition. What Mussolini did, and Hitler after him, was to break up the opposition's organization. That was the real crime.

IT MEANT that those opposed to the Fascist or Nazi regimes, could get no practical, first-hand experience of government. Each opponent was doomed to live apart from government. If he banded with other opponents, he could do so only in secret conspiracy. The men of the opposition had no chance to see each other in action, to learn in the school of parliament which of them were natural leaders able to command official and public following—to learn, equally important, which of them, though promising much, proved in actual practice colorless and inadequate.

Badoglio, an Italian marshal, became Mussolini's successor as premier.

But that didn't solve Italy's problem, which had become one of finding and setting up a long-term government able to govern, to command popular backing, and to secure the recognition and cooperation of other governments.

The day will come when Germany faces the same problem.

Hitler, the only man in Europe to outdo Mussolini in bombast, has declared that the one party government of the Third Reich will last "a thousand years," with future fuehrers provided by fuehrer schools, where chosen individuals are taught how to cultivate the peculiar combination of intuition and brutality necessary to lead the Germans into hopeless predicaments.

Suppose the Germans, like the Italians, suddenly wake up to the fact that they would sooner be governed by the opposition?

They too, will find themselves stultified beause the opposition is unorganized. They will find themselves weak in the hour of national crisis because the opposition is weak. They will find a field marshal assuming the chancellorship of the Reich and setting up an interim government under martial law.

Or perhaps, rather than that, they will choose the way of anarchy. . . .

Yes, the decadent democracies, nursing their "debating societies" and defending the idea of organized opposition, may have something after all.

"Another Racket"

I read your editorial this morning entitled "Another Racket." I just want you to know how much I appreciate it. You are always alert to the problems which our community faces and to editorialize on them is always a great help.

I also want to say that it has been a pleasure in my first year in Washington to work with your paper. You have been exceedingly cooperative.

FREDERICK E. REISSIG,
Executive Secretary, Washington Federation of Churches.
Washington, July 27.

I would appreciate some space in your paper to comment on your editorial, "Another Racket," in this morning's issue. How your readers must have hesitated to believe their eyes when they read the lines in which you advocated a campaign to deal with the foul abortion racket in the Nation's Capital by means of a "frank campaign stripped of moral issues"! How they must have been stunned to read that Dr. Frederick E. Reissig, executive secretary of the Washington Federation of Churches, attributed the appalling abortion figures in the Nation's Capital to a "lack of marital education" and suggested that the needed education should be given among others, by "planned parenthood groups." How utterly shocked they must have been to read still further on that you actually approved of Dr. Reissig's suggestion.

Precisely the contrary is needed—not a campaign stripped of moral issues, but a campaign with emphasis first and foremost on the moral issues involved in the abortion racket. And so, too, is the contrary of planned parenthood or birth control needed. The latter is one of the most prolific causes of the very evil you speak of. Let a line from the eminent French scholar, Dr. Paul Bureau, suffice on this score. "One cannot be surprised at this," he states, "and the silly (if made ignorantly) or lying assertions of all the neo-Malthusian propagandists will not alter the fact: the spread of anticonceptionist practices is always accompanied by an increased number of abortions."

How, one must ask, are you to strip the matter of moral issues? The whole matter is intrinsically a moral issue. Abortion is murder, the taking of innocent human life, a definite violation of the Fifth Commandment. The unborn child is fundamentally and essentially a human person, and as such has the full rights of a person, even though totally incapable of asserting and protecting those rights himself. And certainly the right to life is a most fundamental right. Undoubtedly many who are guilty of this foul practice at the same time are most keenly aware of its brutal injustice and the shocking moral wrong that it implies. But so far has our demoralization gone that there are actually some today who would pretend to justify the practice. Certainly it makes one conclude with Taine: "Whenever a man becomes a pagan he finds himself licentious and hard."

If we are to clean up the shocking abortion situation in the Nation's Capital—and in the entire Nation—we must use far different methods than those you advocate. We must strike at the paganism that engendered it. We must clean our Stygian stables. We must get at the vicious, harmful currents in the social milieu around us—Freudianism, the cult of nudism, selfish individualism, rank materialism, the degradation of the press and cinema. It is out of the moral cesspool that these have created that have sprung the whole horde of family evils—abortion, birth control, divorce, etc.—that are rapidly carrying our Nation, perhaps the greatest the world has ever seen, down the slopes of decline.

It's a gigantic task, yes. But it will have to be done. This at least can be done immediately: accept abortion for what it is—plain brutal murder; and deal with it accordingly.

Filthy Forks

Isn't there a Health Department in this town which can do something about the filthy eating utensils in some of our restaurants and cafeterias? I know of one Government cafeteria where a pile of rejected knives, forks and spoons accumulates beside the silverware bins as the line moves by. They are rejected because of old food clinging to them. Although they may be sterile, they are a far from appetizing sight to one on his way to a meal.

Too many eating places are careless in this respect, and getting more so. Inferior kitchen help and apathy on the part of both management and customers are probably responsible. "FUSSY."

The Once Over

Private Purkey Adopts A Code

Dear Mom: Well, I am now with my old Pal, Moe. (Just say them last two words over and think of a city in Sicily and it will give you a cue to where I am.) I can't come right out and say where I am so you will have to get it from hints. Like when I write to tell Annie to keep her big trap closed it was a sort of code to tell you I was in a place called Trapani.

I guess we better agree on a code to keep track of me from now on. It will all have to be based on the idea that I will be able to keep track of where I am which is no easy trick on account of we get rushed around so fast in this globule war. For instance, Mom, if I write a lot about mess you will know I am in Messini and if I should write a letter and talk a lot about a insurance company you will know I am near Mt. Aetna. Catch on?

I hope you understood what I meant by always talking about losing my Pants and having Malaria in my letters of last month. I was trying to tell you I was on a island called Pantstelleria. It looks like we wood be in Italy pretty soon so you will have to study my letters careful for cues. Whenever I speak of Jennie you will understand I am in Genoa. Mildred will be Milan. (I am stuck with what girl's name to use if I get to Florence.)

In case I write something like "Everybody in the Army is singing "Finickulee—Finnickulah" it will denote I am in Naples and the same will be the case if I speak of Judge Crater or say my skin has eruptions or things like that. Any time I mention the Gowanus Canal or write about canoes and pigeons just take it as a tip I am in Venice.

Like we agree on some time ago whenever you get a letter from me speaking about a fiddle and may be saying I am burning up about something you should be able to decode it as meaning my outfit is in Rome. I could put in a word like Nero, only the censors might get suspicious.

I will wait a couple of weeks before working out some words to let you know what parts of Germany I am in. If I am in Berlin I will just write about songs like Alexander's Rag Time Band, I Left My Heart at the Stage Door Canteen, and so forth. As soon as I am anywhere near the Alps I will ask you how the Saint Bernard dog is and if Pop is keeping up his yodeling lessions.

Well I gess you have gessed where I am from my opening words about my Pal, Moe. This is a big city and the capitle of Sicily. It is located on the waterfront. I looked it up in a guide book and it says it is a very old city and was once took by the Phoneyshuns, the Greeks, the Cartridginians, the Normans and Gene Sarazen. I am not allowed to give you any more clues.

I am well and only had one close call in the invashun of Sicily. This was when I took four prisoners. A little later I decided to release them but they would not stand for it. They became very quarrelsum and refused to let me release them. I had to call for help. I also had a little row in one town when the natives started abusing us for arriving too late. They had wanted to give up 48 hours sooner. It was all straightened out when we explained our watches was slow.

Well, everything is going fine. I hope you and Dad are fine.

Your loving son

OSCAR.

Cost Of Living

Re the story on the front page of today's Post of the Government employe who is about to quit because she finds the cost of living too high, having to pay a maid $15 a week to care for her baby, the net result to her being that it costs her $3.82 per week for the privilege of working.

Actually there are two persons paying for the privilege of working. The maid who is paid $15 per week presumably is a patriotic American who buys her quota of war bonds. She has to provide for retirement in her own way and she has proportionate expenses to meet. The proportionate deductions would be about as follows: Retirement $.75, withholding tax none, war bonds $1.50, 11 meals away from her work at $.50, $5.50; laundry and miscellaneous items $3.60, room rent $5, total, $16.35. So the maid, too, pays for the privilege of working by losing $1.35 per week.

The Government employe who has decided to quit will gain $3.82. The maid might be able to fill the vacancy at $1440 by taking a simple examination thereby gaining several hundred dollars, and the Government, too, would be ahead the difference between $1440 and salary of the resigning employe.

Foreign Policy

F. D. R. Repudiates OWI Broadcast

THE CONTROVERSY over OWI's Sunday and Monday broadcasts on the downfall of Mussolini brought into the open a situation which periodically has given high officials deep concern. This is OWI's tendency to draft and promulgate its own foreign policy.

LINDLEY

During the early period of the North African occupation, several important OWI officials were at odds with the policy of the United States Government. This dissent was sharper in private than in public, but nevertheless was reflected at times in OWI activities here and in North Africa. After a time this schism apparently was healed.

OWI officials confer with the State Department regularly to inform themselves as to American policy and mark out the general lines of foreign propaganda. Nevertheless, there have been instances when, in the high official view, OWI's short-wave broadcasts have been flavored with Russian, rather than the American official view. There is understood to have been a sharp difference of opinion as to the OWI line in China, between Owen Lattimore, deputy director in charge of Pacific operations, who was for a time political adviser to Chiang Kai-shek, and the New York office of OWI, from which short-wave broadcasts to the Atlantic and European areas are directed.

THE FIRST OWI broadcasts on the downfall of Mussolini—which the President repudiated—were so widely at variance, both with official policy and with common sense, that they remain inexplicable. They denounced both King Emmanuel and Badoglio as Fascists. As "typical" of unofficial reaction in the United States they quoted two columnists, one genuine, one fictitious. The genuine columnist was Samuel Grafton of the New York Post, a sharp dissenter from the French policy of the American and British governments. The fictitious one was "John Durfee," who, in substance, concurred heartily with Grafton. "John Durfee" is understood to be a high OWI official in New York, who has aired his personal views from time to time on OWI broadcasts as if they came from an independent and well-known commentator.

The domestic air Sunday night and Monday was filled with comments—many of them from persons better informed than Grafton and "John Durfee" and certainly no less entitled to be regarded as "typical" of American "unofficial reaction." On Monday there was probably hardly a newspaper in the land which did not publish an editorial on Mussolini's downfall. But OWI apparently preferred Grafton and the conclusion of "John Durfee" that "while the news of Mussolini's resignation is welcome to Americans, it is not regarded as an event of great importance."

THE FIRST of these broadcasts is said to have been prompted by broadcasts from the British Broadcasting Corporation interpreting the downfall of Mussolini as the end of Fascism. Someone in OWI's New York office decided that the B.B.C. was dangerously wrong and that an instant correction was needed. So this largely imaginary and distorted report on the American view was beamed to Great Britain.

At that moment a detailed projection of American policy was unobtainable. It was not needed. The general lines had been laid, and it was to be supposed that these lines were as visible and understandable to OWI as they were to numerous Washington correspondents. Even if there had been no general guidance in the previous statements from Washington, ordinary common sense would have dictated caution in the treatment of what obviously was a development of the utmost importance. There was no occasion for OWI to jump to conclusions, while responsible officials were waiting for further information and developments—especially to conclusions which were adverse to our interests. It could have confined itself to a factual report on the news and on the reaction in the American press and radio.

OWI is not the only agency of the Government which tends, or has tended, toward the promotion of independent foreign policies. In this respect the Board of Economic Warfare was, at one time, regarded by the State Department as a notorious offender. But these separatist tendencies often result from poor information and insulation. OWI's overseas branch can plead no such extenuating circumstances.

Mussolini's Fall Laid to War, Dreams of Expanding Empire

(Last of a series by the chief of the former Associated Press Bureau in Rome on the rise and fall of the "Great Chin.")

By Richard G. Massock

Yesterday Benito Mussolini was 60, a tragic has-been, his shriveled fame lying in the ashes of his consuming lust for power.

He reached the zenith of his career and his popularity when he was 52, when in 1935-36 he successfully defied the great powers of the world and conquered Ethiopia to set up an Italian empire.

This period of glory lasted less than five years. When Mussolini dragged his reluctant people into the war against France and Britain in 1940 as an ally of Hitler, his inglorious foreign policy had cost what respect his nation held him in and spelled his doom along with that of his discredited regime.

In the first declarations of his dictatorship, Mussolini said Italy's power must be built up, not by militaristic adventures, but by peaceful economic expansion. Treaties once made must be carried out, he said.

Had Mussolini stuck to that policy, he and Italy might well have avoided their present disgrace.

Flattered by Hitler

But the Duce of fascism, inflated with his successful application of force and violence at home, set out to make this the century of Mussolini in world history. Fascism, if not exported, was imitated abroad.

But the Austrian malcontent, Adolf Hitler, flattered Mussolini with such a good imitation in Germany that he took the reins of history from the master's hands and made of fascism the springboard to war.

It is doubtful if Mussolini welcomed Hitler's achievement of success. He obviously distrusted an emulator who, with a more powerful country to begin with, was starting out with the avowed aim of making Germany still greater.

When they met for the first time at Venice in 1934, Mussolini behind the back of the Nazi dictator called him a clown. That year Mussolini stopped Hitler's first attempt to grab Austria by rushing 40,000 troops to the Brenner Pass.

But his aspiration for a bigger Italian "place in the sun" was the Duce's undoing.

His Horizon Was Wide

Drunk with the dream of empire, Mussolini wanted to control Africa and the Mediterranean. He longed for naval parity with the French, freedom from British control of "our sea," the possession of Malta, Tunisia, Corsica. He wanted to hold a key to the balance of power on the Continent.

When Hitler sent aid to Gen. Francisco Franco in the war against the Spanish republic, Mussolini felt that he also must do so to protect his Mediterranean interests.

So Mussolini sent planes to Franco and fliers to pilot them. Then he sent men and guns and munitions. He lent his submarines to sink the Republican supply ships.

From that day, Mussolini walked hand-in-glove with Hitler in all matters of foreign policy. Hitler wanted the Sudetenland. Mussolini arranged the Munich settlement for him—and Hitler took Czechoslovakia. Hitler wanted Danzig and Mussolini advised the Poles to give it up. He balked only at going to war over Poland, whose territories Hitler really wanted.

France was still too strong, however, to surrender anything without a war and Italy was far from ready for that. So Mussolini instead seized upon defenseless Albania.

The Stab in the Back

Apprehensive though they were, the Italians, who had cheered Mussolini when he staved off war at Munich, were confident he would keep them out of it a year later, when the Germans attacked Poland. And so he did, by the dodge of nonbelligerence, until he rushed in, as he thought, to get his booty out of France.

In allying Italy to Germany in 1939, Mussolini had made a secret reservation. Italy would not be expected to fight a major war for at least three years, because she would not have enough armaments. During that time, Hitler would raise no controversial question.

Whether Hitler tricked Mussolini, or whether Mussolini fooled himself with excessive admiration of the German blitz victories in western Europe, he stabbed a fallen France in the back, only to bring his people shame.

Unprepared Italy, whose people wanted none of the war, was plunged into probably the most inglorious adventure of her centuries of history.

Italy's defeat at the hands of Greece, which brought the Germans to the rescue and made her virtually a Nazi-occupied country, the loss of the African empire at the hands of the Allies, the invasion of Sicily. The Allied bombings, these stripped Mussolini of the last tatters of his prestige.

And so, at last, the great chin jutted out no more.

Steinbeck Finds London Crowds Groping For Facts on Sudden Ouster of Mussolini

By John Steinbeck

(Editor's note: There will be a pause in the Steinbeck series while the author is on a "mission" for further material).

London.—The city was very dark. There was an overcast and little starlight behind it, so that the buildings were only blacker lumps against black. No light at all came from the buildings and in the streets only the little dim lights on the traffic islands. The cabs went by with their tiny slitted lights. The city was really blacked out.

Earlier the radios had carried the announcement that Mussolini had resigned, and on the 12 o'clock news broadcast the dry voice of the B. B. C. announcer had read the proclamation of the King of Italy and of the new head of the government, Marshal Badoglio. A quick thrill had run through the capital and then had subsided. No bells were rung and there were no cheers.

Crowd Waits for Bus

On Piccadilly, by Green Park, a queue had formed, waiting for a bus. They form in England for everything and before things happen. The people in the queue were blobs of darkness, silent and without identity. A man lighted a cigarette and for a second the people in line became different one from another. There was a man in Home Guard battle dress and there was a small, round man in a derby hat, two girls in uniform and three girls who probably worked in a factory, an American corporal, three British soldiers with tank corps berets. That's as far as the light went. There were others back in the line, and when the light of the match went out the line fell back to the dark blobs. The people were very silent.

Then one voice said out of the darkness, "Bad lot, that one. Time he was gone."

Another, who might have been the Home Guard, said, "Yes, but is he gone? Is it a trick?"

Now the voices came from all over the line, as though the reticence having been broken, they all wanted to talk and to question. "Maybe there's an arrangement they aren't telling us about."

"Maybe, behind the scenes, the same old people with a different name."

"Well, you know it might be a Boche trick to get us to turn our heads."

"Do you suppose the government knows?" And then the question that was troubling everyone, "Do you suppose the government—ours or the Americans, will make peace with them under a different name?"

And then a woman's voice, "They wouldn't dare. We'll have our eyes on them. They wouldn't dare."

"We'll have to wait and see. We've got to keep our eyes open."

A sharp, breathy voice of a man who was panting a little—"Do you doubt your government, sir?"

There was a babble of voices in replying, then the darkness sorted out the voice with authority and the others fell silent. "Doubt, or not doubt, we're watching. We got 'what for' in the last one. We don't intend to have it happen again. We aren't going to have it again. Our government will be wise to know this. We will just be watching."

A girl's voice then sang lightly the song the aircraft workers sing sometimes: "They say that we are common, and common we may be, but what of dear old England, were not for such as we?"

The soft laughter that followed was not of amusement.

A man said, "Badoglio is anti-Fascist and never was a Fascist."

And the authoritative voice replied, "The King of Italy has backed Mussolini. Maybe he had to, but he did it. Will we make peace with the King of Italy?"

"Might make an armistice to take Italy out of the war. That would be a good thing and the Balkans will feel this soon. Watch Hungary now, too, watch Rumania and most of all, watch what happens on the Russian Front. This will be a kick in the belly to the Boche."

The authoritative voice said, "Watch everything, watch 10 Downing Street, watch the White House and the State Department. We do not doubt them but let them beware. We will not have it again. We will not have it again."

The girl's voice took up again, "But where would dear old England be were not for such as we?"

People Fierce and Weary

A silence fell on the queue. They shuffled a little in the darkness. There was the fierceness of great weariness in these people.

"Ah well," said a man at last, "we'll know the way the wind blows in a week or so. But it will take a time to shape up, but the shape will stand out when it comes. We've got the little books and the names in the little books. We won't have it again."

The black street was very quiet. No honking of horns. At a hotel entrance across the street some Americans were shouting for a taxi without the slightest chance of getting one. The great bus approached almost silently and drew to the bus stop. And silently the head of the queue entered it and drew its line after it. Inside they felt their way to seats and some went up the stairs to the top deck. The conductor put his little light on the coins in his hand as he made change for the fares.

Working Class Vote Viewed As Hurdle To Willkie Should He Run in 1944

By George Gallup

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

This is the first of a series of three articles assessing Wendell Willkie's political strength as a candidate for 1944.

Princeton, N. J., July 29.—If Wendell Willkie is the Republican nominee next year, he will again face a problem which confronted him when he ran for President last time, namely, how to win from the New Deal a sizable part of the vote of the laboring class—the skilled and unskilled workers of the country.

Already the C. I. O. has begun launching a campaign to reelect President Roosevelt, who has won the lion's share of the laboring vote in the last three elections. If the Willkie forces count on making inroads upon that vote, they have a particularly hard task ahead.

If Willkie were pitted against Roosevelt in an election at the present time, the laboring class would cast its vote for President Roosevelt by a majority of about 2 to 1, with Willkie receiving approximately the same proportion of the vote in this group as he did in 1940.

That is the indication from a presidential "trial heat" in which the Institute recorded the public's vote from coast to coast on the following question:

"If the presidential election were being held TODAY, and Roosevelt were running for President on the Democratic ticket against Wendell Willkie on the Republican ticket, how do you think you would vote?"

Among the skilled, semiskilled and unskilled workers of the country, the vote of those expressing a definite choice is as follows:

Roosevelt	65%
Willkie	35

A comparison of the vote today with the vote in the 1940 presidential election shows virtually no change in the attitude of the working class toward Roosevelt and Willkie. The 1940 vote of that group follows:

Roosevelt	66%
Willkie	34

President Roosevelt continues to enjoy the support not only of the working class generally, but also of that portion which has been organized into labor unions.

The vote of labor union members throughout the country in today's "trial heat" is:

UNION MEMBERS	Today	1940
Roosevelt	71%	72%
Willkie	29	28

Income Tax Payments Here Up 48 Million

By S. Oliver Goodman

Federal in come tax payments by Washington individuals and corporations for the fiscal year ended June 30,1943, nearly doubled those of the previous year, according to figures released yesterday by the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

Total income tax collections from the District of Columbia were $107,251,736, as compared with $58,532,789 in the previous year and $23,481,336 in 1941.

Individual tax payments soared to a record $80,408,699, as compared with $43,100,085 for 1941 and $15,355,444 for 1940. Corporate income tax payments were $26,843,037, against $15,432,704 in 1941 and $8,125,892 in 1940.

Three Factors in Spurt

The sharply increased collections here, as well as nationally, reflected the swollen tax rates and expanded wartime incomes. In addition, numerous newcomers filed their Federal returns from Washington for the first time.

Total internal revenue receipts from the District of Columbia were $165,932,380 for the fiscal year ended June 30, as compared with $84,235,973 in the previous year and $39,367,550 on June 30, 1941.

Excess profits yielded one of the largest returns, totaling $9,352,989 against $2,322,212 in the previous year.

Some of the internal revenue categories which more than doubled their yield during the fiscal year included:

	June 30, 1943.	June 30, 1942.
Liquors (including occupational taxes)	$3,046,453	$1,698,172
Tobacco taxes	391	58,207
Retailers' excise taxes	2,478,253	1,199,525
Telegraph, telephone, radio and cable	919,531	446,710
Local telephone	733,744	333,633
Transportation of persons	2,242,736	436,634
Transportation of property	1,294,798	.....

Three Categories Show Drop

There were only three internal revenue categories which showed a decrease during the past fiscal year. They were: gift tax payments which dropped to $403,506 from $482,813; narcotic dealers occupational taxes, $2,081 against $2,541; manufacturers excise taxes, $45,461, against $120,392.

Employment taxes, one of the large categories, increased to $13,873,717 as compared with $11,321,391 in the previous year.

Nats' Rally Falls Short, Chisox Win, 5 to 4

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

Did you notice the name of that fullback who joined the Redskins at San Diego the other day? He got only casual mention, along with the names of a half-dozen other new Redskin players. Buried down in the dispatches was the news that Ted Key, formerly of U. C. L. A is a member of the squad.

POVICH

But that name was enough to cause sports editors to blink a bit, at least. Eight years ago, Ted Key was a famous case. The wires were hot with stories about the fellow, and pictures. For weeks, he was a full-fledged mystery and a storm center in the Pacific Coast Football Conference. Eventually, they declared him ineligible.

Ted Key was playing fullback for U. C. L. A. in 1935. The Uclans were headed toward the conference title and the big game with California was coming up. On the morning of the game, California brought charges against Ted Key. They said he wasn't Ted Key. They said he was Ted Key's brother. They forced UCLA to keep him out of the lineup.

We got the complete fill-in from Capt. Paul Zimmerman, former sports editor of the Los Angeles Times, now of the United States Army with a Washington assignment. He tells us how California, with Key out of the game, beat the Uclans in the knowledge that they had no other competent fullback and need not anticipate any weakside plays. California was able to overshift without fear, bottle up the Uclans running game, and upset the U. C. L. A. apple cart.

But the controversy over Key raged for weeks thereafter. At first he maintained he was Ted Key, not his brother. In Texas, his father also identified him as Ted Key, not Clois Francis Key who played football at the Texas School of Mines and thus was ineligible to play for U. C. L. A.

Dean Earl J. Miller of U. C. L. A. made a special trip to Texas to investigate Key's identity and the credentials the lad had presented from the Panhandle High School. When Miller returned to Los Angeles, Key was automatically dismissed from the university on the grounds that his credentials were not proper.

Confronted with all the evidence, Key's father admitted he had identified the boy wrongly "to protect him as every father should protect his son, and see that he gets an education."

It was a blow to U. C. L. A., Key's kicking, running and passing had made their team a winner. They had groomed him for a varsity job by inviting him up to Los Angeles to attend Urban Military Academy, a junior college that was a sort of U. C. L. A. football farm. The credentials he presented from his high school were seemingly his own. He had to make up certain credits before he could enter U. C. L. A. At the military school, Key successfully rounded out the required credits.

The dean's investigation also brought out that Key had played for a semipro longshoremen's team in Texis, in addition to the Texas School of Mines.

Anyway, that's Ted Key, now up with the Redskins. He's a 205-pounder now, quite a bit heavier than when he was playing for U. C. L. A. After his exit from college football, he played a few years in the California pro league. He also took a whirl at professional wrestling.

Key is still a young man. Football men from the Coast say he's surefire to be a help to the Redskins. Eight years between his college football days and his debut in the National Pro League is a long time, and the pro teams don't ordinarily search out that sort of talent. But this is a year when the grubbing for players is tough, and apparently a fellow who could play football like Key did, is not to be ignored.

That was something of an upset in New York the other day when the Yankees and Indians staged their sprint races in connection with their war charity game. Not the Yankees' famed George Stirnweiss, stealer of 73 bases in the International League last year, but the Yanks' Charley Keller was the winner.

Stirnweiss was supposed to be faster than Keller, but when the showdown came that was disapproved. At 60 yards, Keller was his master. The answer probably is that Keller's hitting overshadowed his other talents during his four years with the Yankees. He didn't steal bases because he was too valuable to risk injury, but it was always known that Keller could run, if need be.

Incidentally, the respective times of the various 60-yard sprints staged by the players in the different towns didn't hurt George Case's reputation as the league's fastest man. Keller beat Stirnweiss and the rest of his opposition in 7 seconds flat. Case won his race here against Thurmon Tucker of the White Sox in 6.5 seconds. That's a lot faster, as the stop watch reckons it.

256 In Congress Ask College Athletics for Army Trainees

Petition Already on Stimson's Desk; Presidential Action Promised Rep. Weiss

By the Associated Press

New York, July 29.—College athletic leaders, whose efforts to obtain permission for Army specialized training program students to compete in intercollegiate athletics so far have been unsuccessful, heard today that they had been just one step away from success last June.

Representative Samuel A. Weiss, of Pennsylvania, Congressional champion of spectator sports, revealed that at one time a directive had been issued to Col. Herman Beukema calling for a revision of the A. S. T. P. program to allow for competition.

Order Countermanded

Before the revision could be made, however, the order was countermanded by Secretary of War Stimson.

Weiss added that he had received word from President Roosevelt, in a reply to a telegram calling his attention to the situation, he would take up the matter with the Secretary of War, and that a petition signed by 256 members of Congress already was on Stimson's desk.

Weiss suggested that the athletic directors enlist the aid of their college presidents to counteract an impression in the War Department that educational leaders were opposed to intercollegiate competition as a method of physical training.

Favored Competitive Athletics

In addition to Weiss's outline of the efforts made by his informal Congressional Committee to preserve spectator sports, John B. Kelly, chairman of the Federal Security Agency's Committee on physical fitness, said that his committee always had been in favor of competitive athletics, especially for the armed forces, and is doing everything it can to have the Army "give the boys the opportunity to play football, baseball and other sports."

The athletic directors, representing about 50 Eastern colleges, also discussed what Asa Bushnell, C. O. E. I. A. executive director, called the "six-hour paradox." Army's trainees are required to take six hours of physical training weekly and a discussion revealed that in many colleges schedules are so arranged or could easily be arranged so that this time could be devoted to sports practice.

The Navy's share of today's news was that, under a new directive, "skippers" of V-12 units no longer had authority to permit a trainee who never had attended college to participate in any extra-curricular activities, and a suggestion from Capt. John H. Whelchel, Naval Academy athletic director, that most of the other problems involving Navy trainees could be settled by time and a little diplomacy.

Whelchel also discussed football attendance and transportation problems, pointing out that Navy will play three games in Baltimore this fall and plans to adjust starting times so that crowds can be carried by street cars returning after delivering a "work load" to industrial plants.

A discusion of whether colleges should play Sunday games as a wartime emergency measure was led by Cornell's Bob Kane, who advanced several reasons for favoring the move. Cornell, he said, will play Sunday football this year if its opponents agree.

Hines Hurls No-Hit, No-Run, Sandlot Game

Charley Hines turned in a no-hit no-run game for Miller Furniture against M. B .M. Navy Yard yesterday in a seven-inning Departmental League game on the Ellipse.

Only two men reached first against the former Western High hurler, one on a walk and another on an error by Dansburger. Hines struck out eight and coasted to victory behind the 13-hit attack off Bray.

Cards Lose Play-Off, 2-1; Win Second

Nine Runs in 4th Help Rout Phils; Protested Game Won in 9th Inning

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, July 29.—Rising in injured indignation, after losing the playoff of a protested game, 2 to 1, the Cardinals overwhelmed Freddy Fitzsimmon's Philadelphia Phillies today, 13 to 5, scoring nine runs in one inning.

Loss of the playoff was hard for the Cardinals to take because it subtracted a 1 to 0 victory previously credited to the world champions and substituted a defeat.

Completion of the game, which was halted by rain fater 7½ innings on June 5, was ordered on Phildaelphia's contention that the Cardinals had failed to cover the field so that play could be resumed after the storm.

Kraus Vs. Krist.

With the exception of Jimmy Brown of the Cardinals, now in the Army, the same lineups took the field to finish the 1½ innings, with Jack Kraus opposing Howard Krist.

Jimmy Wasdell, first up for the Phillies in the ninth, tied the score with a home run to the right field pavilion roof. Babe Dahlgren walked, Glen Stewart sacrificed and Merill May looped a single to left, scoring Dahlgren.

The game ended dramatically with the Cardinals' would-be tieing run cut off at the plate. Danny Litwhiler,* pinch-hitting, doubled in the last of the ninth. George Kusowski singled but Litwhiler was out trying to score on a fine throw from Wasdell to Catcher Tommy Livingston.

Barett Pounded

The regularly scheduled game started off as a pitching duel between Dick Barrett of the Phils and George Munger, who was knocked out of the box in the first inning of last night's contest.

Barrett suddenly lost his stuff in the fourth inning and two more relief pitchers, Lloyd Dietz and Dale Mathewson, saw service before the Cardinals were stopped with nine runs. In all 14 men went to the plate. Ken O'Dea and Kurowski each hit two singles in the inning and Munger helped himself with a double.

Dahlgren had a perfect day for the Phils with five for five.

Griff Buys Le Febvre, Pyle Goes

Miller Southpaw Features 'Glider' As Best Delivery; Other Deals Hinted

In two moves designed to bolster his sagging pitching staff, President Clark Griffith of the Nats yesterday (1) bought Left-hander Bill Le Febvre from the Minneapolis team and (2) released Southpaw Ewald Pyle to Minneapolis.

The Minneapolis club was also given a sum of cash, in addition to Pyle.

Le Febvre, a tall, strong-armed southpaw, formerly had a trial with the Red Sox, but achieved more hitting than pitching fame. In the only game in which he figured with Boston before being sent back to the minors for more seasoning, Le Febvre hit the only ball pitched to him for a home run in Fenway Park.

At Minneapolis, Le Febvre had a record of 10 victories against 7 defeats. His best pitch is a slider. Pyle had won four games and lost eight with the Nats.

Pyle has been the chief disappointment on the Washington staff. Bought from Toledo last winter in the draft, he was impressive in spring training and pitched magnificently in his first four starts, but thereafter was a complete flop. His failures dated from the day when he was struck on the pitching hand by a line drive off the bat of Frank Higgins of the Tigers.

During the past month, Pyle figured only in relief roles, and with no success.

Griffith is hinting that more deals are brewing, particularly for pitchers. "All our staff is overworked as a result of the solid schedule," he declared.

Bond Bowling Nearing End; Griffith Helps

With the Silver Spring Board of Trade bowling tournament needing a terrific spurt to put it over the top of $500,000 in war bonds, tournament sponsors are hoping for a last minute drive to reach the amount set by the board of trade and purchase a Flying Fortress.

Clark Griffith yesterday made an unsolicited purchase of a $500 bond.

The tournament will continue through tomorrow at midnight with tonight's special attraction including a visit to the alleys to watch the feature match by Mary Beth Hughes, the Hollywood starlet.

All events on the $4000 prize list remain open.

Vander Meer Fans 14, Reds Beat Braves

By the Associated Press

Cincinnati, Ohio, July 29.—Johnny Vander Meer walked nine men and fanned 14 tonight for one of his old-time victories for the Cincinnati Reds in the play-off of last night's postponed Army-Navy relief game with the Boston Braves. The score was 4 to 3.

Vandy had the crowd chewing fingernails throughout but he was hotter than he was cold and wound up the game by fanning the side in the ninth. He got Chet Ross thrice and three other players twice.

Steve Mesner won the game for him in the eighth, after the Braves had tied the score in their half on Phil Masi's pinch single with the bases full. Mesner doubled to score Frank McCormick, who had walked.

Detroit Jockeys Win; Suspension Of Adams Is Cut

Detroit, July 29 (AP).—A threatened strike of jockeys that would have halted racing at the Detroit race track (Fair Grounds) was averted today when the track stewards reduced to 10 days a suspension imposed upon Jockey Johnny Adams.

Reduction in the suspension was made at the request of a committee representing owners and trainers at the track and the intercession of William J. Dowling, Michigan Racing Commissioner, who urged a compromise to insure a continuance of racing.

Andy Farkas Offered for Tuffy Leemans

San Diego, July 29.—Andy Farkas, leading ground gainer of last year's championship Washington Redskins, today was offered to the New York Giants in an even-up trade for Tuffy Leemans by G. P. Marshall, part owner of the Washington club.

LEEMANS

Farkas, who is still unsigned and who threatens to quit professional football unless his contract terms of approximately $8000 per year is met, is still at his defense plant job as recreational director with the Engineering & Research Corp., Riverdale, Md.

Leemans, turned down by the Army and who was signed recently to aid Steve Owen as assistant coach of the Giants, has already announced he planned to quit as an active player.

Moses Steals Past Case

George Case last night yielded the undisputed base-stealing lead in the American League to his most persistent challenger, Wally Moses of the White Sox.

Tied at 26 stolen bases each entering the game, Moses moved ahead of Case by stealing No. 27 in the eighth inning after reaching first on an infield single. Case reached base only once during the game, and on that occasion had no chance to steal, what with a teammate on second.

Tuero whipped blonde John Shea of Los Angeles in straight sets, 6—1, 6—3, in their quarter-final match, while Ed Ray of Taft, Tex., surprised third-seeded Bob Kring of Los Angeles by defeating him in a marathon, 6—8, 6—4, 8—6.

Justifying his No. 1 seeded rating, Herbert Flam of Beverly Hills, Calif., led the boys' division into the semifinals with a straight set win over Buddy Behrens of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., 6—1, 6—0. William Rafferty, Chevy Chase, Md., won over Gilbert Sheam, Los Angeles, 3—6, 6—1, 6—3.

Yanks' 14-Hit Attack Routs Indians, 11-1

By the Associated Press

New York, July 29.—The Yankees treated the Cleveland Indians to a typical "bomber special" with all the trimmings today.

Lefty Marius Russo served up a gaudy two-hitter and the Bombers flattened three Cleveland curvers with 14 hits. The result was an 11-to-1 Yankee triumph that evened the season series between the two clubs at six victories apiece.

Along the way, Charley Keller clouted his fourteenth homer of the season; Joe Gordon parked his tenth among the paying guests and Bud Metheny chipped in with No. 2. These block-busters made it a cinch for Russo to chalk up his third win of the year. Except for the first inning, when the Tribe came through with its only run on a walk, Hank Edwards' single and Roy Cullenbine's fly, it was easy all the way for Marius.

The Yankees evened the count in the second when Keller doubled and scored on Vernon Kennedy's error, and in the third, a four-run rally put the game on ice and drove Kennedy to the showers. A pair of walks, a long fly and singles by Metheney, Keller, Russo, Nick Etten and Bill Johnson contributed to the splurge.

Curtright O.K., Leaves Hospital

Chicago White Sox Outfielder Guy Curtright was released from Georgetown Hospital early yesterday morning after having spent a "very comfortable night." The rookie gardener, currently among the five leading hitters, was hit at the base of the skull by one of Alex Carrasquel's fast balls, Wednesday night. An X-ray showed he suffered no fracture.

Fire Warden Scores Three-Length Victory in Herkimer 'Cap

Dini Holds Night Glow For Place

By the Associated Press

Belmont Park, N. Y., July 29. Rushing into a long early lead and holding seven rivals safe for the entire six furlongs, J. T. Maloney's Fire Warden took feature honors here today with a three-length victory in the Herkimer (Class C) Handicap, decided over a good track.

The smallest crowd of the four-day-old Saratoga meeting—13,980—saw the 4-year-old Burning Blaze gelding speed over the main course in 1:11 4/5 under Tracy Vercher. W. C. Winfrey's mare, Dini, annexed the place by a length, with Gustave Ring's Night Glow next in line. Air Current and Eire, an entry saddled by J. J. Barker, finished fourth and fifth, respectively, in the role of favorite.

Fire Warden, accounting for his initial triumph since last Armistice Day at this same track, carried his high speed farther than usual to pay his backers $11.60 for $2.

Once Fire Warden scampered into a four-length lead in jig-time, the race was over for all practical purposes. But his followers, who had seen the gelding start off as if going to a fire and then weaken on some other occasions, did not take the triumph for granted until the field was well inside the final furlong. Dini, which did all the chasing, could not get close enough to menace the flying victor. She did hold on courageously to stave off Night Glow.

Eire faltered after running third early and Air Current found his stride too late. The topweighted Colchis never became a vital factor.

The Reel Dope

Advance Scouts of Bluefish Army Making Sorties in Bay

Wilson Hersberger (left) and his son Marshall of Washington caught catfish. They were fishing at the mouth of Broad Run near Seneca, Md., a point where they've always had good bass catches. In the absence of bronzebacks they tried a few chubs for bait and within an hour had pulled out this string—18 catfish.

By Tom Moore McBride

Post Fishing Editor

This department's long-range forecasting anent the numbers of bluefish which would be in Chesapeake Bay late this summer and early autumn has been blessed with a semblance of verification. For even now, there are some blues schooling in the bay and the lower Potomac.

To be sure, they aren't big ones. Most of those caught so far have been running about a pound and a half to two pounds. But they are being taken trolling off Colonial Beach, Va., along with plenty of rockfish, which are running about a pound larger.

The only difficulty, however, is that the waters off Colonial Beach are used for naval gunnery practice during certain hours, which restricts the hours you can fish to some extent.

Our prediction of a larger run of blues was based on the reports from all up and down the coast of increased catches, even though the fish seem to be smaller than they were before the great migration away from these waters. Here's hoping the forerunners of the flock don't find the shootin' and the bombin' around the bay too unpleasant and tell the other blue gamesters to stay away.

The eminently readable and usually accurate magazine Sports Afield went to great pains to tell how to remove a fishhook from a finger in its August issue. The explanation was quite cozy and complete, with diagrams on how to push the point and barb through the finger, file them off to a blunt and and pull the debarbed hook back through the wound.

It all sounds quite neat and logical, except for the fact that wire-cutters or pliers with wire-cutting jaws are found in many more tackle boxes than are files. What's more, it's a lot simpler and less painful to snip off the point and barb with wire cutters than it is to jigglingly file them off even with the other end of the hook held by pliers.

Extremely good advice, however, is the section of the piece which suggests coating the cut-off end with iodine before the hook is drawn back through the finger. Iodine should be in every fishing kit.

The reports that Maryland game will be available in better numbers than it has during the pas tfew years is extremely interesting. But more interesting is the reason given for the big increase: protection and conservation during the last 10 years. When you consider the fact that almost every conservation effort by the Izaac Walton League and other sportsmen's groups has been fought tooth and toenail by some commercial group or other, it's a tribute to the sportsmen that so much has been accomplished.

But much remains to be done especially in the realm of salt water fish. You can help by joining the Walton League or some other sportsmen's organization dedicated to good hunting and fishing and the conservation that will keep it good.

Incidentally, the Virginia Game and Inland Fish Commission is recommending that penalties for violation of the ban on spotlight hunting of deer should be strengthened, with fines up to $300 and imprisonment up to 30 days. The commission plans to take the matter before the next General Assembly. If you've ever been driving along a road at night and turned your headlights on a startled deer, seen his paralyzed perplexity and what a perfect target he'd be, you'll write your assemblyman to support the stricter legislation and curb such slaughter.

Reel angles: George Ruppert tells of the fisherman in Rhode Island who caught a 51-pound striped bass in the surf and, understandably enough, did a little bragging. Three days later his fishing pal, somewhat tired of it all, topped it with a 56-pounder. Both fish were caught at Narragansett, R. I. . . Earl Doucette, writes from Maine to tell of the man who surprised himself by catching trout while there was a great commotion going on in the water. The boys who plug for sea trout in the Florida Keys will tell you they make as much noise as possible to attract the fish—even beat on the surface of the water with oars.

Aviles Match Wright's Last For Duration

One of the boxing game's most brilliant performers will be bidding adieu to the ring here August 9 when Chalky Wright, dusky former featherweight champion, hangs 'em up after his 10-round battle at Griffith Stadium with Mexican Angel Aviles, latest sensation of the 126 pounders, under the Joe Turner promotorial banner.

Wright plans, six days later, to embark on sea duty with the U. S. Maritime Service and at present does not plan to take part in another pro bout until the war is won.

Strangely enough, the veteran Wright, 38 years old and one of the marvels of the ring, is also from Mexico of American parentage. He was born in Durango, Mexico, and did not migrate to Los Angeles until 10 years old. He started fighting in 1928 and eventually wound up as a stablemate of Henry Armstrong.

Sons of Volomite Prominent In Hambletonian Speculation

By Orlo Robertson

Associated Press Sports Writer

New York, July 29.—The $40,000 Hambletonian still is nearly two weeks away and the rich trotting race never has been exactly a happy hunting ground for favorites, but you can put this down in your future book—its at least one to a hundred that the winner will be a son of Volomite.

When the dozen or so 3-year-olds get away August 11 at Empire City, where a 34-day meeting opened today, facing the barrier will be three highly regarded offsprings of that famous sire, who heads the famous Walnut Hall farm stud at Donerail, Ky. They are in order of their current odds: Bill Strang's Volo Song, Joseph F. Burke's Phonograph and the only nonmusical member of the trio—Mrs. James B. Johnson, jr.'s Worthy Boy.

On the basis of times, Phonograph, who cost his Plainfield, N. J., owner $5000 as a yearling, figures to be the favorite, but Volo Song was the champ 2-year-old of 1942 and has been the most consistent winner of the three this season. He set the Brooklyn warehouse owner back $5000 as a yearling, but it'll be money well spent if he gives likeable Bill his second straight triumph in the buggy-horse derby. Strang won last year with the lightly regarded the Ambassador at Goshen, from which track the classic was transferred after 13 years because of transportation problems.

The trio dominated the 3-year-old stakes at North Randall, where Volo Song trotted his fastest mile in 2:03½; Phonograph turned the distance in 2:02¾ with Strang's Ace on the sidelines and Worthy Boy trounced Burke's colt in 2:04¾.

Volo Song showed that he was in shape by working a mile in 2:05, the last quarter in 29 seconds, at Old Orchard Beach, Me., yesterday. He and Phonograph will tangle at Maine's kite track next week before moving on to Empire, where, Worthy Boy already is quartered.

But if you don't desire to string along with one of three choices, the word is to watch out for Austin Hanover, a son of Mr. McElwyn owned by Thomas B. Graney of Sparkhill, N. Y.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

By Drew Pearson

JUST BEFORE he left the United States for the war zone, Archbishop Francis J. Spellman of New York, the President's closest link with the Vatican, told friends of weekly conversations he had had with Pope Pius XII in which His Holiness expressed hope for an early understanding between the Vatican and Soviet Russia.

Archbishop Spellman was secretary to the Pope when, as Cardinal Pacelli, the Pope was Vatican secretary of state, and he remains one of Pius XII's most trusted confidants. All during the war and until the New York archbishop left the United States, the two conferred regularly by transatlantic phone at 1 p. m. on Wednesday.

These phone calls, never before publicized, are one of the anomalies of the war. Though this meant a telephonic hookup of two enemy countries, connections were made promptly and the conversations never censored or garbled—at least from our side.

When the history of this war is written, it may show that the transatlantic calls between the Pope and his closest adviser in the United States played an important part in paving the way for a rapprochement between the Vatican and Russia. Pius XII dropped many tell-tale hints in these talks about discord in Italy, which were relayed to the President.

Pope Against Dictators

Speaking from an enemy country, the Pope could not of course unburden himself of his innermost feelings toward the Axis, but Archbishop Spellman told his friends that he manifested his contempt for Hitler and Mussolini in subtle ways. He was extremely depressed about the state of affairs in Europe and once confessed to his former secretary:

"I'm very lonesome and worried. I wish you could come over and visit me because I need your advice very much."

It was shortly after this that Archbishop Spellman left to visit the Pope and to take up his new duties as "military vicar" of Catholic chaplains of foreign war fronts. In the light of the foregoing background, his itinerary is interesting. After flying to Lisbon and thence to Madrid, a Spanish plane carried him to Milan, Italy, from where he was driven to the Vatican with an escort of Italian soldiers.

In several of his transatlantic talks with Archbishop Spellman, Pius XII mentioned Russia and expressed hope that some way could be found to bring about a religious accord which would endure in postwar years. The Pope made it clear that he looked to President Roosevelt to blaze the trail.

When thi was made known to Roosevelt shortly before Archbishop Spellman's departure, the President pledged his wholehearted assistance. He urged the church leader to act as his personal intermediary with the Vantican and make a full report to him on his return to the United States.

Present plans call for direct negotiations by the U. S. Ambassador in Moscow, with the possibility that the Pope may send a personal envoy to talk things over with Premier Stalin.

NOTE: It was natural for the Pope to turn to President Roosevelt to aid in effecting a concordat with Russia, for Pius XII stayed with the Roosevelts at Hyde Park during his last visit in the United States as papal secretary of state.

Hiram Johnson Recovers

Doctors at the Naval Hospital have reported to Roosevelt's personal physician, Admiral Ross McIntyre, that there was one thing entirely beyond their power which turned the tide in the recent illness of Senator Hiram Johnson of California.

Senator Johnson, stricken with pneumonia last winter at the age of 77, was not expected to live. Newspaper reports speculated that in case of his death, Republican Governor Warren of California would appoint Herbert Hoover to Johnson's seat.

After about the second day of Johnson's illness he was in an oxygen tent. His condition was not good when Mrs. Johnson came to see him. Opening the door of the oxygen tent, she told her husband:

"Hiram, there is one thing I think I ought to tell you. The newspapers are saying that in case anything happens to you, Herbert Hoover will take your place in the Senate."

The explosion from inside the oxygen tent was terrific.

"Get this —— damn thing off of me!" fumed the Senator from California. "There's nothing wrong with me. I'm feeling better already."

Naval doctors say that from that point Senator Johnson began to improve rapidly.

Farm Tools

President Roosevelt has on his desk a report which may mean plenty of trouble for the big farm machinery companies.

The report states that in the Middle West, some of the farm implement companies not only have been spreading poison against him, but also have been withholding machinery parts in order to force the Government into resuming the manufacture of implements.

The problem with most farmers is to repair their machinery. While they would like to be able to buy new equipment, they are patriotic enough to scrape along with what they have—provided they can buy spare parts.

But these sapre parts, according to information reported to the White House, have been made purposely scarce. Big farm implement people are accused by White House advisers of keeping repair parts off the market in order to force the War Production Board to relent on its order against the wholesale manufacture of implements.

If this is correct, the strategy has been successful. For the WPB ban has now been lifted.

Note: White House advisers also have reported that most farmers are working heart and soul for the war and are not basically anti-Roosevelt. However, the President was told that they are being aroused by the big farm lobbies and by agents of farm machinery companies.

Mussolini-Go-Round

Mussolini and his son-in-law Count Ciano are reported to have about 15 million dollars cached in neutral Argentina . . . Ciano and daughter Edda are safely ensconced inside Vatican City, where Ciano is ambassador and enjoys diplomatic immunity. There is no way he can be extracted unless the Pope chooses to expel him. It is a safe bet Ciano will not risk coming out on his own for a long, long time . . . While the Italian nation was strictly rationed, Count and Countess Ciano added to their popularity in Rome by throwing elaborate parties. Caviar, lobster and champagne featured the menu . . . When Augusto Rosso, former Italian Ambassador in Washington, was transferred from Russia to be Italian Ambassador to Turkey, the Nazis stopped his appointment. They said he was too pro-American. Rosso has an American wife, the former Mrs. Francis Bunker of Denver.

Rail Loadings Gain

The Association of American Railroads reported yesterday that 833,826 cars of revenue freight were loaded during the week ending last Saturday. This was an increase of 6,496 cars, or 0.7 per cent, compared with the preceding week; an increase of 28,311 cars, or 3.3 per cent, compared with the corresponding week a year ago.

Ringside Table

—With Mary Harris—

BANDS ROLLING IN. New musical crews will be marching into three upper bracket niteries within a few days . . . Tomorrow afternoon the Neptune Room will present Henry Daye and his Knights, meaning novachordist Hank Lapidus and drummer Bill Acker. Leader Daye switches from clarinet to saxophone, electric and Hawaiian guitars and piano. Also new at Neptune tomorrow will be Kay Arden, interlude pianist, whose technic is described as "ranging from soft to solid." . . . Come Monday afternoon the Valero Sisters' orchestra will make its bow in El Patio. The band includes the two Valero lasses plus six men and they recently held New York's Rainbow Room spellbound for a solid 26 weeks . . . Tommy Reynolds and his band will move into the Roosevelt Hotel's Victory Room on August 10, taking the spot of Henry Jerome's orchestra who've proven themselves to be always "on the beam."

Victor Borge, the unmelancholy Dane of the radio, will open at the Statler on Thursday, August 5, undoubtedly delight one and all with the pixilated doings that brought him national fame in Bing Crosby's show.

SWING SHIFT MANAGER. Manager Gerald Trimble of Hotel 2400 Sixteenth Street is going to need all his notable pep and energy. For he's going to take over the management of Atlantic City's Claridge Hotel which reopens on August 12—and keep right on running "2400." He plans to accomplish this hefty double chore by spending half of each month in Washington, half in Atlantic City.

IN THE MAIL. A carte postale from Lieut. Comdr. Vincent Gallagher, owner of the King Cole Room, who seems to be busy about Uncle Sam's business up on Long Island. . . . Lieut. Arnold Wolters of Camp Belvoir writes that 4000 sojer boys enjoyed the show presented by Ralph Hawkins and his band from Crossroads plus Singer Lydia Allen and Ventriloquist Joe King. . . . A note from Dancer Talia who seems to be in St. Louis saying she's so happy to be returning to the Troika on September 23. . . . And, of all things! A postal from "Chuck" O'Donnell, former star mixologist of the Anchor Room. Says he likes everything about the Navy but doing his own laundry. "Chuck" never did think much of water.

"JIVIN5 JACK" SHAFFER, FORMERLY OF THE CASINO ROYAL, IS NOW CHIEF ENTERTAINER FOR THE WOUNDED BOYS OUT AT FOREST GLEN. AND DISHING UP PLENTY OF "YAS, YAS, YAS!", YOU CAN BE SURE. AND YOU CAN IMAGINE HOW "JIVIN' JACK" LOOKS IN UNIFORM?

LOTUS SCENARIO. The little girls had edged almost on the dance floor to enjoy Jack Morrison's pretending to be a toy soldier. But when he suddenly turned around in the ogre-ish person of Frankenstein, they all squealed "E-e-ek!" and sprinted back to their tables and mammas. . . . Lotus' manager, Dick Lam, and his family are fresh back from a trip to Richmond.

OF JEWELRY. Mayfair's Dardanelle is wearing a big pear made of brilliants . . . Marcella Hendricks of the Mayflower Lounge sets off a black frock with a string of beads that look like glittering soap bubbles . . . Marian Carl of the Old New Orleans is flaunting a pair of smartly monogrammed gold earrings . . . Margaret Lopatin, blonde head lady of Burt's Trans-Lux, has matching gold filigree bracelets and earrings . . . Ken Burgher, publicity man for Restaurant "400," has bought a star sapphire ring (for himself, the meanie!) . . . Oscar of the Hi Hat has an endless array of good looking lapel pins.

If the Army doesn't take Treasure Island's Rocco Terrone or Myles Hallett of the Starlight Roof, both of these maestros will be bridegrooms in no time. Myles' heart is set on a sweet blonde and Rocco is engaged to a young career woman.

The Federal Diary

By Jerry Klutz

1000 Army Officers To Be Retired Soon

After August 31 there will be fewer top-ranking Army officers on duty here. It's estimated that 1000 will be retired within the next five weeks.

KLUTTZ

An order has gone out that will force the retirement of colonels who are 60 and above; brigadier generals who are 62 and up, and major generals who are 64 and over. They'll be replaced by younger officers. Some won't even be replaced. Meantime, the department is sending to the field officers who are under 35. Moreover, it's almost impossible now for a civilian to get a commission. Only a few who have specialized technical training will be accepted. Other officer candidates must come through the training schools and some of those are being curtailed.

From Capitol Hill a statement has been made defending the number of civilian employes in the Federal service. It came from Senator Mead of New York, and it's believed to be the first of its kind and it may be very significant. It isn't politically popular to defend Federal workers. That's why we have so many attacks on bureaucracy from the Nation's legislators. The significant part of the statement is the fact that Mead is an Administration stalwart and it implies that the Administration is becoming worried over the attacks and their possible political effects. A recent Gallup poll showed bureaucracy to be one of the leading domestic issues. And if the Administration becomes convinced that bureaucracy will cost it votes next year, you can expect plenty of changes.

Senator Mead pointed out that the growth in Government had been in war agencies . . . that War and Navy Departments had jumped from 780,000 to more than two millions since Pearl Harbor, an increase of 150 per cent. But during the same period, Mead explained, our armed forces expanded more than 300 per cent. All the other war agencies, he said, had hired 160,000 since Pearl Harbor. The New Yorker reported the peacetime agencies had 830,000 employes in December, 1941, and now they have 820,000. Some, he said, had made substantial reductions but they had been offset largely by the Treasury Department, which had added 18,000 to sell war bonds and to collect the many new taxes, and the Commerce and Justice Departments, which had many war activities.

Nonwar Costs Slump

Nonwar expenditures, Mead said, had slumped from $6,500,000,000 to about $4,000,000,000 for the present fiscal year. The reduction would have been greater, he said, if it hadn't been for overtime pay and higher prices for supplies and services. The Senator believes the Government has been converted to an all-out war footing because 93,000 employes have been transferred to war jobs by the Civil Service Commission and because peacetime work has been eliminated, and other bureaus have been reorganized. There's every reason to believe that the Mead statement is the first blow in a counter-offensive by the Administration to protect the size of the Government. It has been hinted that the President will have something to say about it in a forthcoming radio speech.

War Department soon will announce civilian awards for its 50,000 employes here. Employes who have been with the department for six months will be given a ribbon. A button will be given employes who perform a meritorious act in line of duty and employes who come through with an outstanding performance outside the line of duty will be given a pin. Moreover, the employes who perform meritorious acts for the good of the service will be given meritorious promotions as provided in the Ramspeck-Mead automatic promotion law. This provision has been generally overlooked by Federal agencies despite the fact it has all the possibilities of a top-drawer morale builder-upper. Meantime, the President's committee, which was set up seven months ago to make awards to civilians for outstanding war work, does nothing.

Two of the highest-paid people in Government are the two former telephone officials who were hired by Post Office to make a survey of postal rates. It's estimated they'll draw about $15,000 for nine months' work, which is a higher rate than received by cabinet officers. Post Office employes who have spent a lifetime studying postal rates don't like the outsiders one bit. They'll have to do the work, they believe, when the showdown comes, and they won't get the money . . . Dr. John R. Mohler spent his last day in his Agriculture office yesterday telling Bureau of Animal Industry workers goodby. He has headed the bureau for years and as a retirement gift his employes gave him a clock, desk set and flowers . . . The 3000 Government girls at Arlington Farms are protesting against cafeteria prices which they say are out of line with prices charged in Government cafeterias . . . Tomorrow is the last day to get in your suggestion for the $100 war bond award for the July Better Government contest.

Convictions Block Data On Drunks

Two Committees Unable to Report; Work to Go On, Says Judge Barse

Further immediate action leading toward the rehabilitation of habitual drunkards and prostitutes received a temporary set-back last night when two committees cooperating with Chief Judge George P. Barse of Municipal Court were unable to present reports due to a multitude of convictions against individuals.

The meeting was held in the judge's chambers on Fourth Street between E and F Streets Northwest, and was attended by District civil, police and court officials.

Judge Barse was optimistic about the plans of himself and those associated with him. They are determined to continue their work to a satisfactory conclusion in the interest of society in general and less fortunate persons in particular, it was agreed.

Judge Barse said "some of those convicted have been so as many as 140 times and these numerous convictions have delayed the report. Much more time is needed for their investigation than we at first supposed."

Joseph Sanford, probation officer of the court, was to submit a report on individual cases so that in the future the court could base its action with a view to saving unfortunates for themselves and society, Judge Barse said.

A second committee, having to do with the law as it relates to the court ordering treatments, and headed by Corporation Counsel Richmond B. Keech, failed to make its report, Judge Barse said. The reason is that more time is needed to do research into the law governing the privileges of courts in such cases without losing sight of the rights of those who come before the court.

Panel Fines Six Motorists Coupon Each

Nonessential driving cost six motorists one A coupon each in a session of the special OPA panel board at the Force School, 1740 Massachusetts Avenue Northwest last night.

Four other cases were dismissed and four drivers failed to show up at the eleventh and lightest special panel hearing yet to be held at the school.

Three violators were assessed one A coupon each after their cars had been found parked at Takoma Park swimming pool. They were:

Sidney Myers, 3742 Ninth Street Northwest; A. E. Johnson 5336 Belt Road Northwest and E. Schimmack 1317 Emerson Street Northwest.

Others penalized were John Brown, 314 South Capitol Street; Charles A. Wickers, 284 Cromwell Terrace Northeast; Henry J. Murphy, 3301 Prospect Avenue Northwest.

The hearings, instituted June 24 as a means of lightening the loads of the rationing boards, have disposed of 340 cases of alleged violations of the pleasure driving ban.

8 District Nurses Assigned to Army

Eight Washington area nurses have been assigned to the Army Nurse Corps through the D. C. Red Cross Nurse Recruitment Committee, Miss Lillian Adams, secretary of the committee, announced yesterday.

Dr. Ruhland Deplores Deaths Through 'Errors in Judgment'

Deaths through "error in judgment" in Washington would be drastically curtailed, if not totally prevented, if a plan Health Officer Dr. George C. Ruhland has suggested is carried out, he said last night, a few hours after he had reprimanded Gallinger Hospital for sending home a baby that died six hours later.

Placing some of the responsibility for the future directly in the laps of the Civil Service Commission and the District Commissioners, Dr. Ruhland said it is obvious we cannot get the sort of physician we need for a maximum of $3600 per year for full-time work."

He said he had proposed that full-time physicians be paid a rate commensurate with their profession as this would add competent doctors, but he would not state what he thought was a "fair figure," preferring to leave that to the Civil Service Commission.

With the death of eight-months-old William Hannum, 718 F Street Southwest, on July 23 at 6 a. m. after he had been sent home following an examination at Gallinger, where he was taken in a police car, Dr. Ruhland began an investigation that last night culminated in the reprimand and strict orders to the institution not to turn away any case about which there is a doubt. He said he could not include noncity hospitals in his order. Gallinger is a District institution.

According to the findings, the baby was shifted from Children's Hospital to Gallinger. The ailment was diagnosed as respiratory infection with possible middle ear trouble. The child had a temperature of 102, according to the Health Department. The child was taken to Gallinger in a police car at midnight, July 22, where a June graduate, who began his internship only 22 days before, examined the infant. He found its condition improved sufficiently to allow for home treatment and the child was taken home, where it died six hours later.

Dr. Ruhland and Dr. Edgar A. Bocock, superintendent at Gallinger Hospital, agreed this act by the intern constituted an "error in judgment."

The death of the infant has served to spur Dr. Ruhland in his fight for sufficient and competent doctors, he said. He said he will again take up the matter with District Budget Officer Walter Fowler when the latter returns from a vacation and then press his argument on through the District Commissioners and the Civil Service Commission in the hope his plane for an "efficient Health Department" will bear fruit.

Hardy Type

Woman Finds Gas Dearth No Problem

A double problem faced Mrs. Mabel Goodwin, 54, of this city—how to visit her daughter in the Pocono Mountain town of Effort, Pa., 200 miles from the District, and how to deliver two saddle horses—without galsoline.

So she took the bull by both horns and the horses by both bridles and set out—riding one horse and leading the other.

The trip took her 12 days and, she said, at an interview by The Associated Press, in Effort, "I had quite the best time of my life. I felt like a pioneer. Maybe I was."

Before leaving, Mrs. Goodwin said, "I called my daughter on the telephone and said I was going to deliver those horses and I was going to ride them. She said I couldn't stand the trip.

"I told her, 'shucks they rode farther than that in Civil War days and I'm just as hardy as they were then.'"

Mrs. Goodwin avoided concrete roads and took dirt ones whenever possible, and stopped for the night when she came to a farmhouse whose setting she admired.

"It was marvelous," she said, "staying with such fine people I had never met before. I started to rediscover the country and its folks.

"And when I arrived at my daughter's, I was fresher than I was when I started."

Lieut. H.K. McHarg Will Be Buried In Arlington

Funeral services were being arranged last night for Lieut. Henry K. McHarg, jr., of the Coast Guard of Miami, Fla., who died in New York yesterday. Interment is to be in Arlington Cemetery.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Grace Corbett McHenry, and three children. Lieutenant McHarg was prominent in military circles in the last war. He organized the first Coast Artillery Company in Virginia and served as a lieutenant in the Navy as well.

Both he and his family were industrial leaders. His father was a large stockholder in railroads and Lieutenant McHarg was a major factor in the Virginia Iron & Coke Co.

Insanitation Case Forfeits Angers Judge

David Noy Kee, restaurant owner at 929 Ninth Street Northwest, who last week was fined $25 for violating a sanitation ordinance, yesterday was allowed to forefeit $25 on a similar charge as enforcement authorities indicated that nothing is being done to force defendants into court.

In other cases yesterday, a grocer forfeited $25 collateral and a baker was fined $35, bringing to 54 the number of persons this month who have either been fined or have forfeited on charges of allowing filth to accumulate in their business establishments.

Kee was this time charged with having his premises infested with rats and roaches, exposed food, dirty work tables, refrigerators and cooking utensils.

Harry Bass, grocer at 1101 Main Avenue Southwest, forefeited $25 when he failed to appear to answer charges of having a dirty ice box, bad odors, many flies and no garbage can.

Grace Caruso, owner of a bakery at 1404 North Capitol Street, was found guilty by Judge George Neilson of a charge of having junk and trash in the establishment, a large uncovered box containing stale bread, and junk on top of the stove.

Recently, Edward W. Thomas, assistant corporation counsel, recommended to Major Edward J. Kelly, superintendent of police, that collateral in these cases be raised to the point where defendants will appear in court.

Judge Neilson, who has said he is "sick" of these cases, has become angered at the situation where defendants are allowed to forfeit $25 collateral and thereby avoid a conviction and fine, the maximum being $300.

WMC Backs Hotel Drive For Workers

An immediate campaign to obtain 800 additional hotel employes through the War Manpower Commission was planned yesterday after a meeting between Fred Z. Hetzel, WMC area director, and Arthur J. Harnett, executive secretary of the Washington Hotel Owners Association.

Establishment of the exact number of employes and their particular jobs must first be made before the recruiting of workers begins, Hetzel explained.

K. Vernon Banta, United States Employment Office director here, already is working on the breakdown and actual recruiting for employes in the hotel industry will be under way by Monday of next week, Hetzel said.

One of the 35 "needed activities," hotel workers will be paid a minimum of 40 cents an hour.

The WMC has set the 40 cents an hour minimum for the District of Columbia and would be opposed to recruiting labor for substandard wages, a policy heretofore established.

The 800 shortage figure was estimated by Harnett, and was accepted by the area WMC director as a basis to work from.

Hetzel said the campaign to secure workers would parallel the plan used a month ago in securing workers for the laundry industry in the District.

Motion picture shows, churches, clubs, newspapers and personal solicitation all are expected to be put into play, he said.

More Cash Given to Aid Charwomen

By Mary Spargo

Post Staff Writer

The spontaneous effort to soften the blow for 80 charwomen employed by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing who must repay the Government for a year's overpayment of wages gained momentum yesterday as unsolicited funds continued to reach The Post.

One group of Government workers adopted the suggestion of another Federal employe, Joseph Shannon of the War Production Board, and sent in money to the "Charwomen's Club." This group, identified only as members of the Analysis Unit, Press Division, in the Office of Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs, enclosed $5.25 in an envelope.

Another reader, who asked to remain anonymous, sent $25 with a letter. He wrote:

"I have read about those charwomen having to reimburse the United States Government for the overpayment they received. I realize the Government has to get its money back, but we all know the charwomen can't pay it back without suffering. So here is $25 to help the cause of repayment along. Who else will contribute?"

These contributions, like previous ones, will remain in The Post safe in the names of the donors until final determination is made of the best means of solving the charwomen's difficulties.

Out of their meagre salaries the women must pay back sums ranging from $50 to $100 at the rate of $8 or $9 a month. If they work six days a week, four hours a day, the charwomen can earn about $62 a month.

The difficulty was a surprise to the charwomen, who all have civil service papers establishing their pay rate at 78 cents an hour. The bureau now claims it should be 65 cents an hour.

The bureau apparently misinterpreted Congressional pay raise legislation last August. Several months later the bureau asked for a ruling from the Comptroller General as to the interpretation of the law.

The Comptroller General ruled that the women would have to pay back the extra 13 cents an hour they should not have received.

Most of the charwomen would like to work eight hours a day but despite the shortage of help they have not been put on a full work day.

It will move west on Pennsylvania Avenue to Fifteenth Street, to E Street and right on E Street to Sixteenth.

Chester McCall, Jr., Is Prize Winner In Essay Contest

Chester McCall, jr., 16, son of Mr. and Mrs. Chester McCall, 6701 Forty-fourth Street, last night was announced first prize winner in the patriotic essay contest. Sponsored by First Federal Savings and Loan Association whose advertisements, "Battle Cries of Famous American Heroes," have been appearing in Sunday editions of The Post.

Young McCall appeared on the air last evening and read the winning essay over WOL.

"Winning of this war will be greatest proof in world history of democracy's inherent power and vitality. It will become America's opportunity to make certain that this victory shall not be lost in the next war period."

Trapps to Play 16th Century Works at Post Concerts

The Trapp Family Singers will supplement their vocal selections with works of early composers on the sixteenth century instruments for which they were originally written at The Post series of Starlight Concerts tomorrow and Sunday nights at Meridian Hill Park.

The singers, an unusual musical group composed of an Austrian baroness and her seven daughters under the direction of their priest-conductor, Father Franz Wasner, will play recorders or block flutes and a spinet. They learned the technique of these neglected instruments at their spacious Austrian estate before the Nazis usurped their country.

Ancient Instrument

One of the most ancient of all musical instruments, the recorder differs from the modern or transverse flute in that it is blown from the end rather than horizontally. The four recorders of various sizes in the possession of the Trapp family follow in tone quality the same range as the human voice—suprano, alto, tenor and bass. Instead of sounding flutelike, their music resembles that of a small organ.

The name "recorder" refers to the instrument's earliest use by huntsmen for recording or repeating bird calls while the German designation, "blockfloete," conveys the idea of the mouthpiece, similar to that of a whistle, which blocks off part of the diameter, narrowing the stream of air entering the tube.

Workers to Attend

At the concert tomorrow night, the alto recorder and spinet will be heard in a sonata by J. B. Loeillet, a Flemish flutist and composer who lived from 1680 to 1730. Soprano and tenor recorders will be used for "A Little Terzetto," arranged by Father Wasner. Sunday night, the tenor recorder will be heard in two ancient English melodies—"La Volta" by W. Byrd and "Gavottee" by Handel. All four recorders wil be heard in a group of Austrian dance melodies.

Two hundred complimentary tickets have been given employes of the Treasury Department who will attend as special guests tomorrow night. Sunday night workers of the Maritime Commission, the Office of Censorship and the National Housing Agency will attend as special guests of The Post.

Election Of Bishop Postponed

Spirited Discussion Marks Effort to Name Prelate at Episcopalian Session

The Episcopalian Diocese of Washington in special convention yesterday voted to postpone election of a Bishop of Washington until after the general convention is held in Cleveland the first week in October and then recessed.

It also referred consideration of candidates for the position to a committee of 11 clergy and 10 laity to be picked by the Diocesan Standing Committee, but stipulated that when the convention should reconvene, nominations for bishop might be made from the floor for the convention's consideration along with the special committee's report.

The special committee was tentatively selected yesterday, and will be named next Tuesday.

Minority Report Offered

Decision to defer naming of the bishop yesterday came after a spirited discussion of the resolution offered by the Rev. Reno Harp, rector of Trinity Church, following its favorable report out of the committee of canons. Later the convention took a separate vote to insure deferring the choice until after the general convention. The discussion attained its height when Frederick S. Tyler, local attorney, asked to make a minority report of the decision of the committee of canons. He said no committee had taken in charge the sifting of candidates for the post previously.

"If you delegate any part of your rights to a nominating committee," Tyler said, "You'll simply be imitating the Congress of the United States." He counseled delegates to proceed to ballot for a Bishop of Washington, the only real reason for their being assembled.

Mr. Harp recalled there was considerable ill will within the diocese after the last election of a local bishop and that the Philadelphia diocese had satisfactorily used the committee survey system to curb such a condition.

"Mr. Tyler is a lawyer, but I am the son of a lawyer," he said and "I can't see Mr. Tyler's point." He said his resolution would not deprive the convention of any privileges since it specifically said nominations might be made from the floor.

Deferment Supported

A coterie of supporters of the resolution as presented rose to Rev. Mr. Harp's defense.

Henry P. Blair of St. Mark's parish, said to be the oldest member of the convention, took the floor. He said there was need to postpone the election in view of the uncertainty of the relationship of the diocese to the general church and the Washington Cathedral until after the general convention.

A resolution is to be presented at the general convention proposing the Washington Cathedral become the "See" of the presiding bishop. It is thought this might change the character of the Washington diocese and its bishop. Blair said it would be difficult to select for, or to expect, a churchman to accept a position about which so much uncertainty existed.

Others supporting the resolution said that committee action would allow more candid and thorough consideration of candidates, that it would be difficult to determine a proper income of the bishop without knowing previously his status within the church nationally, and emphasized the importance of taking time to choose the proper man to serve in Washington, at the crossroads of the Nation.

Those speaking included Canons C. W. F. Smith and Theodore O. Wedel of Washington Cathedral, the Rev. Dr. C. Leslie Glenn, on military leave from St. John's Church, and Dr. H. Allen Griffith, retired.

President is Elected

Dr. F. J. Bohanan, chairman of the standing committee of the diocese, was elected president of the convention shortly after itts opening. Other officers named were: Ogle R. Singleton, secretary; H. L. Rust, jr., treasurer; Charles F. Wilson, chancellor, and the Rev. Clyde Brown, diocesan missioner. The Rev. Edward Slatter Dunlap and Thomas Spence are assistant secretaries.

The convention yesterday met in the parish auditorium of St. Stephens and the Incarnation Church, Sixteenth and Newton Streets Northwest, which also was offered for use by the convention during its fall session. Holy communion was celebrated before the business session by the Rev. Edward Gabler, rector of Christ Church.

Tradition Broken With Ban On Racing At Saratoga Springs

Gas Rationing Caused Transfer of Famous Meet To More Accessible Track

By Marie McNair

A ghost walks the streets of Saratoga Springs today. It's the ghost of the OPA.

This pictorial little town at the foot of the Adirondacks which dozes contentedly through the year comes to life in August, dresses herself gaily to welcome horse lovers, turf fans et al. who fill the hotels, the cottages and the boarding houses for the annual racing season.

Today it's a different picture. For the first time since long before the Civil War there is no racing at Saratoga. The reason? Gas rationing and the ban on unnecessary transportation.

The Saratoga Racing Association, after harried conferences on what to do, is holding it's racing meet this season at Belmont Park, opening on Monday with a record-breaking crowd of 17,547. The shift of locale would seem to be a blessing in disguise, for last year Saratoga was already feeling the effects of war, with betting and attendance at the track counted in mournful numbers.

Racing At Spa Before Civil War

But with the passing of racing at Saratoga has gone also a bit of Americana. From the diary of Philip Hone for July in the year 1839 comes a vivid pen portrait of the spa when it flourished as a summer resort a century ago. It revealed that Saratoga was at the end of a long journey requiring many hours of travel. "No watering place in this or any other country can boast of a more pleasant establishment (the United States Hotel) or one better conducted."

"A ball this evening, but I do not think it was as pleasant as the hop on Wednesdeay evening," writes Mr. Hone. "The balls are understood to require more dressing and a greater degree of etiquette prevails, so that the young ladies do not engage in them with so great avidity as in the hops. On the other hand, there is champagne and ice cream and blanc mange, whose presence is confined to the most dignified of these amusements."

All this is a far cry from the whirlwind pace of this era. Saratoga Springs is but a short trip by plane from New York, and in normal times many racing fans would fly up for the day and back again. Ladies in beplumed hats and laces have been replaced by shoulder-bob glamour girls. Cafe society is entertained by society crooners and women have made their appearance on the scene as horse owners and breeders.

To the Virginia hunt country set the annual sale which closed the meet early in September was the event not to miss. This year the sales will be held as usual, but at Belmont Park.

The Virginia Breeders Association met at the Red Fox Tavern in Middleburg on Wednesday to discuss the shipping of the yearling thoroughbreds to Belmont. Mrs. George L. Harrison, the former Mrs. Cary Grayson, and her son, Lieut. Gordon Grayson, U. S. N., recently back from duty in South America, were visitors last week at Blue Ridge Farm, their home in Upperville, and made arrangements to send a consignment of horses to the sales. Others who will send their yearling strings up and who expect to go up themselves for the sales are Alfred Gynne Vanderbilt, jr., who owns Sagamore Farm; Lieut. Walter Chrysler, jr., whose extensive stables are quartered at North Wales; Mrs. Marion duPont Scott, and David N. Rust.

William (Shorty) Lipscomb of Raspberry Plain has six fine colts he will offer for sale; Mrs. Isabel Dodge Sloane has some fine breed at Brookmeade Farm at Upperville she is planning to dispose of, and Jay Phipps of Westbury, Long Island, will send several from his Virginia farm near Middleburg. From the Nydrie Stables, owned by R. A. Van Clief of Charlottesville, Va., will go several of his string, and W. H. LaBoyteaux of New Jersey also will have several colts in the sales.

Costa Rican Artist Visits In Capital

Visiting this section of the country—he has already been in New York and Chicago—before going back to the University of New Mexico, where he has been awarded a scholarship, is Francisco Amighetti Ruiz, a young and distinguished Costa Rican painter. Born 36 years ago of an Italian father and a Costa Rican mother, Senor Amighetti studied at the Liceo de Costa Rica, from where he went on to the Academy of Fine Arts. He did not stay there long; the traditional, old-fashioned methods of teaching art were not to attract the young self-taught artist who was soon to become himself a professor of drawing at the Normal School and later at the Liceo de Costa Rica.

Senor Amighetti has traveled extensively through Latin America and exhibited works in Argentina, Peru and Bolivia and in El Salvador, Guatemala and Nicaragua. He has also been a very successful illustrator of magazines and books—especially children's books—a field with an unlimited future in Latin America, and which seems to hook in with the artist's literary vein, for Francisco Amighetti has himself written numerous articles on art and literature.

After winning the first prize in the National Exhibition of Plastic Arts of Costa Rica, the talented painter has recently obtained a scholarship to study art at the University of New Mexico, Albuquerque, which was granted jointly by the School of Inter-American Affairs and by the College of Fine Arts on recommendation of the Institute of International Education.

New President For Conn. College

Dr. Dorothy Schaffter, member of the faculty of the board of Vassar College, has been appointed president of Connecticut College, according to an announcement made today by the board of trustees of the college. She will succeed Dr. Katharine Blunt, who has retired.

Now professor of political science at Vassar, Dr. Schaffter has been a member of the faculty there since 1930. An authority on public administration and housing, she has done considerable fieldwork and research in those subjects.

Born in Iowa in 1894, she holds three degrees from the university of Iowa—a B. A. in 1925, M. A. in 1927 and Ph. D. maxima cum laude in 1929. She also taught there before taking her post at Vassar.

While at the University of Iowa she did research in municipal legalizing acts for the State Historical Society of Iowa. With Dr. O. K. Patton of the College of Law of the University of Iowa, she worked on the codification of the public health laws of New Jersey. In the summer of 1932 she assisted in a study of Illinois local government for the Illinois Legislature.

Dr. Schaffter is a member of the National Association of Housing Officials, was chairman of the women's committee of the National Public Housing Conference in 1938-39; was a member of the committee on law and administration of the Citizens' Housing Council of New York City in 1938-39, and was the founder and a member of the executive committee of the Poughkeepsie Better Housing League.

Married Wednesday at the cathedral in Baltimore, Md., were Miss Georgia Forrest Green, former resident of Georgetown, and Vernon Eskridge West of Chevy Chase. The Rev. M. Manns officiated. After their wedding trip they will be at home at 23 Hesketh Street in Chevy Chase, Md.

Grogan—Griffith

To make their home in Washington following their wedding trip are Charles Henry Grogan and his bride, the former Miss Enid Gwendolyn Griffith, who were married in the First Church of the Nazarene last Saturday. The Rev. Ernest E. Grosse officiated.

The bride, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Simon P. Griffith, was escorted by her father. She was gowned in white satin and Chantilly lace, with which she wore an illusion finger-tip-length veil held in place with a tiara of pearls. She carried a bouquet of carnations.

Mrs. Harry K. Ager, sister of the bride, served as matron of honor. Her gown was of aqua taffeta and she wore a tiara of flowers. Her bouquet was of red roses. Bridesmaids were Miss Vivian Griffith, sister of the bride, gowned in blue marquisette and a tiara of flowers, and Miss Martha Ann Griffith, who wore a pink marquisette gown with flower tiara. Both carried bouquets of Talisman roses.

John B. Grogan served as best man for his brother. Ushers were Harry L. Woodyard of Arlington and Dominic T. Scuderi of Washington. Following the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's aunt.

The bridegroom is a graduate of George Washington University and received a master of science degree from that university.

Humphrey—Warren

After a brief wedding trip Corpl. Robert Lee Humphrey, jr., has returned to his station with the United States Army Air Corps. His bride is the former Miss Mary Conway Stone Warren, daughter of Frederick S. Warren and the late Mrs. Warren of Middleburg, Va. He is the son of Dr. and Mrs. Robert L. Humphrey of Mountville, Va.

The ceremony took place recently at the Emmanuel Episcopal Church of Middleburg, with the Rev. D. Campbell Mayers officiating.

The bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore a gown of white satin styled with a long train. Her finger-tip veil of illusion was caught with clusters of orange blossoms. Her bouquet was of white roses and Stephanotis.

Miss Madeline Warren of Middleburg, sister of the bride, was maid of honor and only attendant. She wore a princess-styled gown of blue net and carried a bouquet of delphinium and roses.

P. F. C. William Rugus Humphrey was best man and Dr. Frederick F. Warren was the usher.

An informal reception was held in Middleburg at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Norris Royston following the ceremony.

Pan American Union Plans Program

With a gay and colorful program the Pan American Union will celebrate, on Sunday at 5 o'clock, the 100th anniversary of the first postage stamp in the Western Hemisphere, issued in 1843 by the Government of Brazil.

To inaugurate the centennial program, taking place in the Hall of the Americas, the Post master General of the United States will address a message of felicitation to the Government of Brazil which will be answered by His Excellency the Brazilian Ambassador, Carlos Martins, on behalf of his country. Both speeches are to be broadcast and they will be followed by a concert at which the Chamber Music Ensemble of the Army Air Forces Band will play and Miss Gloria Estevez of Cuba will sing Latin-American folk songs.

Miss Estevez is as well known to the Capital, where she has often been heard at different embassies and at private dances and cocktail parties, as in Bermuda and New York, where Cholly Knickerbocker, Esquire and Vogue have commented entnusiastically about her singing. Miss Estevez' voice and guitar have also been heard on the air through the N. B. C. and WOR stations. With her program of Latin-American folk songs she will surely help to make a grand success of the Postage Stamp Centennial program, when the nations of this hemisphere join to celebrate what has perhaps been one of the most important single factors in the development of inter-American relations.

'DuBarry Was a Lady' Hits Peak Among the Musicals

"DUBARRY WAS A LADY." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Technicolor picturization of the musical stage hit by Herbert Fields, B. G. DeSylva and Cole Porter, adapted to the screen by Irving Brecher and Nancy Hamilton, costarring Red Skelton, Lucille Ball and Gene Kelly, with Virginia O'Brien, "Rags" Ragland, Zero Mostel, Donald Meek, Douglas Dumbrille, George Givot, Louise Beavers and Tommy Dorsey and His Orchestra. Directed by Roy Del Ruth. At Loew's Capitol Theater.

GAY AND GAUDY as all get out, tuneful, funny and alive with beautiful girls and spirited dancing, the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Technicolor film version of "DuBarry Was a Lady," now on the screen at Loew's Capitol Theater, is bigger, better and more gorgeous than the stage original. If that seems impossible, or perhaps unnecessary, go take a look!

In its every department, this magnified musical is a superlative achievement in speed, spice and splendor. The cast, led by Red Skelton, Lucille Ball and Gene Kelly in the costellar roles, is top-hole; having been a big musical extravaganza to begin with, there can be no quibbling with the manner of the introduction of the Tommy Dorsey orchestral interludes or the numerous specialties that punctuate the action; the production is one of royal richness and Roy Del Ruth's direction whips the whole thing along at a fast clip that leaves no loopholes for languor.

By and large, and on the strength of its flying start at yesterday's capacity first performance, "DuBarry Was a Lady" gives the quick impression of belonging to that small group of perfect mass entertainments that very occasionally compel the Capitol to hold its most favored attractions a second week. If I'm wrong, sue me!

The pattern of the piece follows that of the smash Broadway hit with reasonable closeness. The fantastic story has its inception in a gay New York night spot, where the hat-check boy is desperately in love with the prima donna and only misses marrying her, when he wins the Irish Sweepstakes, by the margin of one doctored drink intended for his bitterest rival. By that potent potion he is transported to the opulent court of France, where he dreams himself into the crown of King Louis XV and discovers May Daly, the lark, is his DuBarry. All of the characters from the night spot are there in various guises that form the basis of the play's continuous bursts of comedy, songs, intrigue and revolutionary plots. It is all, of course, more elaborately decorated here than it was on the stage.

It Startles, Stuns and Surprises!

The cast divulges more than a few surprises, some of the lines and situations are a bit startling and the whole business is dazzling to the eye.

Perhaps the most astonishing development of all is the emergence of Red Skelton, in the dual role of Louis Blore, the hat checker, and Louis XV, King of France, as a song-and-dance comedian of more than passing competence. The versatile Washington favorite uncorks a few talents in this one that these eyes and ears have never before encountered from him. No less expanded seem the abilities of Lucille Ball in the title role. Always a breezy and buoyant performer, the luscious Lucille now steps out as a talented actress of her "straight" scenes as well as a musical comedy comedienne who takes rank with the best of them.

Zero Mostel, a newcomer to the celluloids, in the comparatively little he has to do, does it in such unique and ridiculous fashion that it seems a foregone conclusion that he will be out there with the front-runners among the comics from this point on in.

Gene Kelly is the "heavy" of the goings-on, singing when need be and providing the most extraordinary dancing of all. Virginia O'Brien, the deadpan songstress; "Rags" Ragland, Donald Meek, Douglas Dumbrille, George Givot and Louise Beavers are among the other principals who give "DuBarry" a great deal that few other musicals have had. Tommy Dorsey's Orchestra, the Oxford Boys, some nice singing ensembles and those Varga Girls run the measure over. And by some wizardry, Technicolor makes more than a few of the scenes look like rare, old, French prints.

In sprightliness and quality, the new stage bill at the Capitol fairly matches the screen feature. It is jointly headlined by Mary Beth Hughes and "Happy" Felton. Miss Hughes, the screen starlet recently seen with Henry Fonda and Dana Andrews in "The Ox-Bow Incident," turns out to be a deep-throated singer of songs with the sort of personality and blond charm that put the audience on her side the moment she sets foot on stage. The abundant Mr. Felton is an amiable singing comedian, who scores no less emphatically. Over and above these two are Carole and Sherod, Grade-A "sister" dancing act, well out of the groove worn deep by constant repetition; Al Gordon and his perfectly trained "untrained" dogs; Shirley Wayne, grotesque comedienne with a fine talent for the violin, and Sam Jack Kaufman's Orchestra, on stage, with Lynn Allison soloing handsomely as one of the "acts." The novel finale, "Put a Stamp in the Book," by a clever device leads the exiting audience directly to the booth in the lobby for the purchase of war stamps—and it works!

The Fox Movietone News and Art Brown's brief, but blitzkreig, song session for what's left on one sockdolager of a bill.

Pix Revives Story of Tracks

"Broadway Bill," fifth in the Pix Theater's "cavalcade" of Frank Capra productions, which opened a week's run on Wednesday, is unique among stories primarily concerned with the race tracks.

Underlying its rich surface vein of comedy is a story of some dramatic power and strong emotional appeal, in which the characters of many men and a girl are strongly influenced and largely molded by a horse.

Based on an original story by Mark Hellinger, who long since abandoned the writing game to become a film producer, and adapted to the screen by Robert Riskin, long Director Capra's favorite scenarist, "Broadway Bill" is no stranger to the quaint figures that haunt the tracks and their strange vernacular. It is upon them that the picture principally relies for the constant flow of humor that tinctures even its more serious moments. One of the most moving of these is the scene in which the horse runs its heart out to win a race and then drops dead and is buried on the track to which he brought such honor.

A great number of sterling players are enlisted in the cast. The costars of the film are Warner Baxter, not seen so much of late, and Myrna Loy, ditto. In their support in the wide variety of roles essential to such a play as this are the late Walter Connolly and Lynn Overman, Raymond Walburn—soon to be seen in one of the major roles in Bing Crosby's "Dixie"—Clarence Muse, Margaret Hamilton, Douglas Dumbrille, currently prominent in "DuBarry Was a Lady," Helen Vinson, George Meeker, Ward Bond, the late Edmund Breese, Master Frankie Darro and many more.

"Broadway Bill," as usual, is surrounded by a supplementary bill of short screen subjects.

Costar in Film Version of Stage Hit

LUCILLE BALL AND RED SKELTON, as they appear, ridiculously enough, in the costellar roles in the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Technicolor picturization of "DuBarry Was a Lady," now occupying the screen at Loew's Capitol Theater. In this story of a hat-check boy who seems to have become King Louis XV of France, the stars are splendidly supported by an A-1 cast.

HEDDA HOPPER

Another 'Road' Tour!

Hollywood, July 29.—Bing Crosby's and Bob Hope's next together will be "The Road to the Yukon." During the good old gold rush days. Funny thing about that series. "Road to Zanzibar" was written for Bing and Fred MacMurray. Then Fred became such a ladies' man they had to find another partner. It was rewritten for Jack Oakie, but he got so fat he'd lost all his sex appeal. And Bob Hope almost turned it down because he said the part was nothing but a jerk. They persuaded him that being a jerk with Bing wouldn't do him any harm. Well, did it?

BING CROSBY

Even though Ava Gardner's and Howard Hughes' romance is out in the open, she and Mickey Rooney have been discussing a reconciliation. I don't believe it would ever work out with those two kids.

Rita Hayworth's studio doesn't like her performing magic tricks with Orson Welles, so when she can't be present at that show of his which opens August 3, her place will be taken by Ruth Warrick.

Some Call It Music.

Bill Bendix has been set for "The Bowery." He gets only a fraction of the $5000 a week Hal Roach gets for renting him out. But he's happy. In the picture he's going to play an M. C. in a low-down joint and sing a couple of songs. It's been taken, right out of his own life when he was on relief. Only time he got any money for his singing was when customers paid him to shut up. Now, have a heart, Bill! We can't do that when you're on the screen.

Twentieth has a comer in young Bill Post, jr. Don't crowd, girls! He's married to young Joan Castle.

A Stick of Dynamite

Stage 5 at Goldyn studio looked like a holdover from. "This Is the Army"—500 soldiers with full packs boarding a ship, and Danny Kaye and Constance Dowling sneaking out of the back of a truck just before it was hoisted onto the vessel. Danny got his pack caught in the flap of the rear curtain and almost hung himself. It took four men to unleash him, and that's the kind of character he plays in "Up in Arms." He tries so hard to be a soldier. Thin as a sliver, practically has a nervous breakdown carrying himself around. Everybody feels sorry for him and dashes to help. But boy! He's sure got what it takes. They practically had to tie him down when they lightened his hair two shades for Technicolor.

You'd laugh at the name of that produer who thought he was going to be caught in the draft. He went East and dug up a wife and child he hadn't acknowledged for years, brought them back with him. Then the age limit was lowered. Now he doesn't know how to get rid of 'em, again.

Hey! If the country's so short of men, how about hiring Paulette Goddard as talent scout for the manpower division?

Sergt. John Bartek, who read the Bible to Rickenbacker and men on that raft, is in town but he's too busy to read that Good Book since he's been here.

Check and Double Check

Kit Cornell was promised a look at herself in "Stage Door Canteen" before it went into the picture. She waited, but finally her husband, Guthrie McClintic, had to make a trip all the way to Hollywood to look at it before giving it his O. K.

Van Johnson has it bad for Anne Baxter. Who hasn't?

Gossip From Gotham

New York, July 29.

A Washington official, who was submitting his resignation, explained to the President that he was quitting because he couldn't get to see Roosevelt when important decisions had to be made. The President told him: "I had a Washington job during the last war. And when I felt the way you do, I went to Wilson and submitted my resignation. President Wilson told me: 'In the Civil War, one of Lincoln's aides wanted to resign for the same reason. And when he went to Lincoln, Abe told him of a young man who went to George Washington in 1778 and wanted to resign for that reason, too' " . . . Roosevelt smiled and continued: "And Washington told that man to go back to work. And Lincoln. And that's what Wilson told me. And that's what I'm telling you—go back to work." The official went back to work.

Last week the newspapers included Leon Henderson among the notables who had forgotten to call for jewelry ordered from the indicted jewelry-designer, Paul Flato. As a matter of fact, Henderson never ordered anything at Flato's. The item involved was a silver cigarette-lighter Leon got from Pepe Corcuera, of Guadalajara. Corcuera was manufacturing only three of these hand-made lighters a day. He asked Leon to find a New York jeweler who might be willing to produce them in large quantities. And Flato was the jeweler recommended . . . Henderson, incidentally, called for the lighter yesterday. He had no receipt, and the receiver in bankruptcy, at Flato's, asked him to identify himself. Girl, 20, Mildly Informs Widowed, Wage-Earning Mother That She Will Brook No Interference in Her Affair With Sophisticated Older Married Man

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a widow, obliged to earn my own living. I have a young daughter, aged 20 (let's call her Julie), who is living in New York City, while my work keeps me here. Julie, like many other girls her age, has decided to live her own life as she pleases. She has become infatuated with a married man, father of two children. He has charming manners, I am told; and is a brilliant scholar, lecturer and teacher of languages, holding a responsible position in New York City. I gather this man is attractive to Julie because of his sophistication and intellectual charm.

This man, who is 12 years older than Julie, is making ardent love to her; and as a result of their friendship, Julie has become alarmingly sophisticated and extremely blase; and is quite defiant about it all. When I try to explain the possible serious consequences of this association to her, she pooh-poohs my "old fashioned ideas." The man, it seems, claims to love Julie dearly and wants to marry her;—but has to wait until the war is over, when his wife (so he says) will go back to her native country and he will get a divorce. This is a preposterous "line" and I am surprised she falls for it. When I suggested that they put aside their friendship until the man is free to make an honorable proposal to her, he sent word to me (through Julie) that he would never give her up.

I do not think my daughter is in love with this man. And a match between them would be unsuitable in any event. I think her vanity is puffed up by his sophisticated court; and, also, that she is lonesome. It has never been easy to meet the right men in New York City; and it is doubly difficult now, when the majority of young men are away at war. Frankly, I am afraid that Julie is headed toward an immoral life, if she is not brought to her senses in time. She tells me not to worry; that she wants to make me happy; but that she intends to lead her life as she pleases; and doesn't want me to interfere in any way whatsoever.

I have a good job here, holding promise of advancement; but recently I applied for a transfer to New York City. I am expecting the transfer to go through any day. Do you think I should go back there, in an effort to shield her? Or should I leave her to find out for herself the folly of her waywardness? Is there anything I can say to make her realize not only that moral principles are at stake, but that her whole future happiness may be wrecked? She is very pretty and attractive,—and intelligent, too. I had wanted her to live with me in Washington, but she always refused; and now I know why. TROUBLED.

Mother Can't Directly Save Girl From Folly

DEAR TROUBLED: I believe your ability to influence Julie's destiny by gratuitous counsel and maternal chaperonage is at an end. And that only the indirect influence of your character (which we must hope is intrinsically sound), as expressed in the capacity to hold sturdily to an exemplary and socially fruitful course of your own,—while breasting the waves of turbulent inner distress touched off by her wayward actions,—can serve as a "beam" to guide her eventually to safe harbor. As has been said by the best psychologists: "It is not so much what parents say or do, as what they are, that fundamentally affects their children for better or for worse."

Concerning this instance of Julie's outlaw romance with the married professor of languages, the worldly-wise adult will instantly say,—and rightly, I think,—that the man is far more to blame than she, for the dishonorable state of affairs: primarily because he, by virtue of his considerably senior age and compound sophistication (of mind and emotion), has an enormous advantage over her, in her greenhorn ignorance of life: an advantage which he is deliberately using to beguile her into taking, beyond recall, a wrong turn at the first crucial crossroads in her young-adult experience, when he surely knows (if he knows anything) that (1) she is looking up to him as the Fountainhead of Wisdom; and (2) that he is making her the gullible dupe of his cynical hedonist philosophy, merely because it suits his present pleasure to do so.

Might Be Some Profit In Appealing to Man

And to see him in this light is immediately to wonder if it would "pay" you,—in the sense of possibly "saving" Julie,—to seek him out and vigorously tax him with his wanton abuse of influence over her. One wonders if an impressive display of flaming indignation, combined with a fervent appeal to what should be his mature-age awareness of Julie's pathetic need of protective (rather than sensualist) emotional treatment,—while her infatuation is running its course,—would by some miracle transform him from Enemy into Ally of the Parental Camp. It might be a worthwhile risk to take. After all, nothing ventured, nothing gained.

But the plain fact is, of course, that Julie doesn't want to be rescued from the romance; that she has been and is a willing victim of the man's seasoned blandishments. So, though you might manage to lecture him into a somewhat more "responsible" frame of mind toward your daughter, you probably would only alienate her further from you in doing so; and make her the more desperately intent on perpetuating the "affair" with him. And supposing you succeeded in breaking off the alliance,—perhaps by convincing the man of the "face-saving" importance to himself, in his position, of renouncing this youngster's companionship while he lives with his wife,—it is entirely conceivable that Julie would promptly retaliate (to hurt both of you) by getting herself involved in some other entanglement even more recklessly wayward.

Counsel Is Effective Only When Solicited

In any event, such is the trend of speculation which leads me to think, as I said in the beginning, that your ability to directly influence Julie's destiny by gratuitous counsel or maternal chaperonage or even by downright interference, is at an end. She has foolishly "taken the bit in her teeth," and is now embarked on a runaway-from-reason course, from which she will only desist when and after chastening circumstances of her own begetting have brought her to reflective pause. And if, on that day, and in that mood of sick hearted perplexity, she can see, and can find, in you, a friend who is wise and calm and strong and sure of purpose,—a person whose individual performance in life has been stable and useful and good,—she may turn to you for help and guidance in pulling herself together and making a new start in the right direction. Which means that the most you can do for her consists (or inheres) in maintaining an emotional detachment toward her headstrong behavior, while steadfastly promoting your own job security,—so that you may stand like a rock-of-ages on the periphery of her dizzy current scheme of things.

Headliner Shoes (Unrationed)

When one of the Nation's top shoe designers starts experimenting with plastic soles, brings out an unrationed shoe that's as expertly fashioned as coupon shoes, that's big news.

Seymour Troy has done just that. He's taken his original baby-last shoe with ankle strap (that shoe we talked about last February) and fashioned the same smart style out of unrationed fabrics. This isn't any casual playshoe, neither is the spectator, to pinch-hit for your coupon shoes. Both of these are shoes in their own right for women who want and can afford the best.

These are the first unrationed shoes we've found in town made by a big-name shoe designer. It's a departure, certainly, and an indication of what may be forthcoming in the future.

Meanwhile, here are two pairs you should know about. The baby-toe comes in white and in beige. Both pairs are available in a complete size range, and are about $14.

For An Overseas Christmas

If the American boys and girls overseas are to receive Christmas gifts next December 25—the time to start thinking about what to send them is NOW.

Even though summer heat and the thought of the traditional icy American Christmas don't mix well, mailing schedules must be followed and this year they are even earlier than last.

The Army has lifted its ban on packages to be sent overseas for the period of September 15 to October 15. No packages will be accepted before or after (unless specifically requested by persons overseas).

The Navy has no such ban, but urgently requests that the Christmas mailing period of September 15 to October 31 be observed to assure delivery by Christmas. And just because October 15 and 31 are the last mentioned mailing days, don't get the idea that ALL packages can be handled on that date alone. To help the services in their postoffice problems, try to "mail early" the same way you have at home in the past, so the largest load doesn't come on the last day.

This year, with supply lines stretched longer, the size and weight of overseas-bound Christmas packages have been reduced. This year the package may not exceed 5 pounds in weight (and this includes the sturdy wrapping the package will need) nor 15 inches long 36 inch combined length and girth).

Correct Address

Mailing mishaps of the past year have made it evident that each package MUST be correctly addressed and well wrapped. Even now, of 20 million pieces of mail going overseas each week, 13 per cent is misaddressed. While every effort is made to route the parcel to its owner, the misaddressed mail wastes the time of valuable manpower, both here and overseas, and the recipient is liable to get a holly-wrapped present six months late. Some of last year's Christmas presents are still being delivered.

A package intended for Army overseas personnel should carry in addition to the name and address of the sender, the name, rank, Army serial number, branch of service, organization, A. P. O. number and postoffice through which parcels are to be routed.

Wrap Well

As important as getting the package correctly addressed is having it properly wrapped for the journey it has to take. Last year thousands of packages disintegrated before delivery because their covering was not equal to the strain of shipping. Christmas gifts should be packed in metal, wooden or solid fiberboard or cardboard boxes. The article or articles being shipped should be packed in the box so that there is no shifting of weight.

The package should be secured in such a way that it may be easily inspected.

To be properly wrapped, the wrapping alone should weigh 1 pound—that leaves 4 pounds for the gift itself—and in choosing what is to make up that 4 pounds, bear these things in mind:

The heat in the hull of a ship is often 130 degrees—hence, no perishable goods. Thousands of packages will go overseas—yours may be the one at the bottom of how many other 5-pound packages; will its wrapping stand up under it?

Remember that food and most clothing are superfluous gifts. Remember that whatever you send, it must be small, easily carried, not like the Old Man of the Mountain, who grew heavier with every step.

Suggestions

We have asked a number of people just returned from various fighting fronts what they would like to see in a Christmas box were they to get it overseas. Here is what they said:

MEN OVERSEAS — Army, Navy, Marines, Coast Guard.

Soap, shaving equipment, pocket knives, small folding picture frame, photographs, bill fold with space for identification cards, books (pocket size), cigarette lighters (send NO fluid), games (small), pocket flashlights, stationery, wrist watches, pipes, foot powder, sun lotion. Those are the most mentioned items. Then come: socks, shoe kit, sun glasses, alarm clocks (!), automatic pencils, fountain pens, cigarettes, cigars, dried fruit, notebooks, puzzles, tobacco, tobacco pouches, small toilet kits, money belts, money (use money order), saddle soap, handkerchiefs.

WOMEN OVERSEAS—WAACS, Red Cross, Army Nurses.

Soap, cologne, foot powder, sun lotion, photographs, cosmetics, games, stationery, folding picture frame, sewing kit, books, hard candy, hairpins, bobby pins, safety pins, dried fruit, cigarette lighter, hairbrush, nail polish kits (light color), towels and wash cloths.

When you look at these lists, don't say to yourself that they already had this or that item, or that you sent one of those last year, remember how long the recipient has been gone and think could he have worn out that one?

Some things are on the prohibited list, among them: weapons, guns and ammunition; intoxicants; indecent pictures; knives, or anything with sharp protruding edges; narcotics; anything in glass, unless great care is taken in packaging; perishable goods; poisons; inflammable materials as lighter fluids, matches and certain types of camera film. (Last year a celluloid comb started a fire that caused the loss of a hundred other packages); compositions which may injure, or kill, or damage the mails.

During the coming weeks our scouts will scour the town to see what the shops have to offer that will put a sparkle into the eye of that boy or girl overseas next Christmas Day. Watch for their reports.

Wonder-Working Wax

By Margaret George

We didn't believe it at first. But they insisted. "It'll stay off for weeks," they said.

We looked at the legs of the girls there in the salon who'd had the wax hair-removing treatment. That clinched it. One girl was in her sixth week (sorry, if that sounds ambiguous), and the fuzz that was beginning to sprout wasn't hard and bristly—it was soft and downy like the hair on your arms.

Another girl in her fourth week (we don't know how else to say it) had no sign of fuzz at all.

It's amazing how the stuff works. It isn't new (grandmother knew about it), of course, but it may be new to you, who've played along with razors for a long time. This is a simple, painless treatment that takes the leg hair right out by the roots.

You go into the salon and stretch out on a lounge. The attendant puts the wax pot on to boil, and when it's melted and cool enough, she puts it on your legs in strips. When it starts to harden, she zips it off—it doesn't hurt—only a kind of tingling sensation.

And the hair is gone for several weeks: five weeks is the average length (although this is a variable, depending on individual hair follicles). All this for about an hour of your time . . . which you spend reclining on soft cushions with lovely scents wafting all around you.

For further information, please call NAtional 4200, Extension 324.

These Women!

By d'Alessio

"Before I settle down with a book, Henry, do you want me to help you with the dishes?"

The Gentler Sex

By Malvina Lindsay

Are Women Patriotic?

Why are American women failing to join the armed services? Is it the hats, the pay, the routine, the discipline, the boredom of wearing a uniform? . . Or is it general war apathy based on a premature confidence that the fight is about over?

All of these things probably have slowed up enlistments. And to these causes might well be added:

The topsy-turvy labor world in which a potential WAVE or WAAC sees the immature, the inexperienced and even the "boneheads" drawing wages to which she cannot aspire.

Girls Question What Lies Ahead

The uncertainty of jobs and opportunities after the war. Will the enlisted women have any future in the armed services? Or in their careers which are interrupted by their enlistments? Or will there be a general dog eat dog scramble based on economic scarcity, with those who lose out forced to the breadlines?

The uninspiring civilian picture . . . the sight of women not in uniform storming the stores for gewgaws and fripperies . . . of hoarders obsessed with material security . . . of well-to-do whiners, who making no sacrifices themselves, howl the loudest over small shortages and inconveniences.

Overcautious and selfish parents who oppose and discourage enlistments of their daughters for fear they will face physical danger or moral temptation or the unknown generally—and that home will be lonely without them.

The education and home training of the last two decades which failed to give young women sufficient sense of responsibility to state and society in return for the privileges enjoyed, but that rather imbued their minds with one concern, "How can I get ahead in the world?"

Psychic Forces Wield Influence

Finally and perhaps primarily, the psychological forces at work just now in the Nation . . . the general letdown of the exalted sentiment that followed Pearl Harbor . . . a sense of confusion concerning what we are fighting for, which is a goal more important to naturally idealistic young women than what we are fighting against . . . the voices of the defeatists, the cynics, the "realists" the reactionaries and the demogogues bellowing above the voices of those who would dare the next step upward out of the slime . . . the failure of the country to crystallize and express its goals and ideals . . . the discord, the criticism, the general inharmony and confusion engendered by politicians and pressure groups intent on petty personal gains . . . the eclipse of the heroic spirit, the lack of the ennobling urge to sacrifice . . . the prevailing sense of earthiness and disinterest engendered by you and me and all of us who are failing to live up to the high and demanding roles in which destiny has placed us.

No, American young women are not unpatriotic. But they are psychically sensitive to what is abroad in the ether. What service they give is an expression of what we as a Nation are thinking and doing.

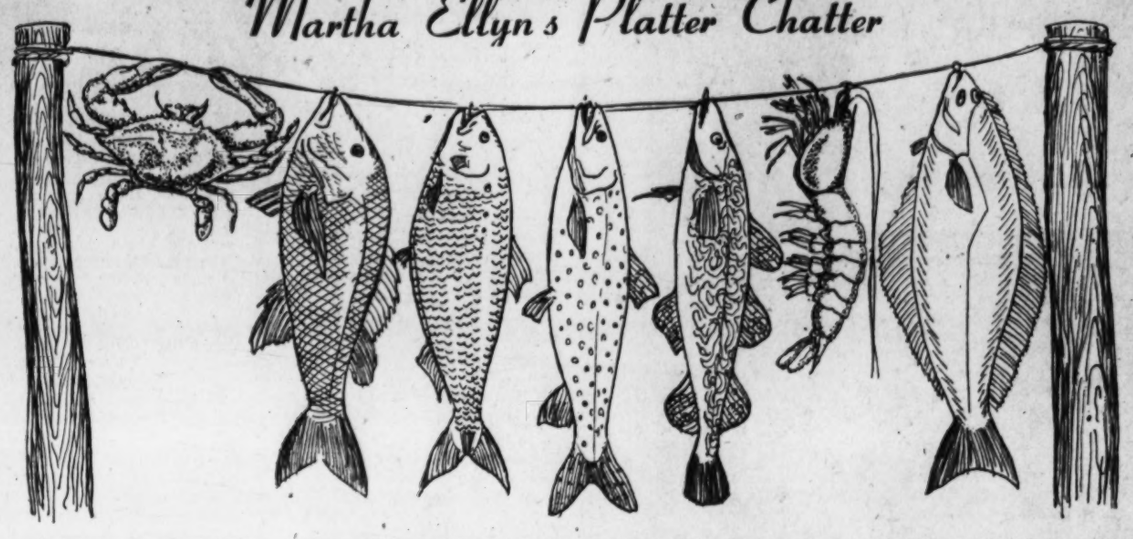
Menu Variety Is Achieved Through Fish and Seafood

No meat today in your market? Well, that shouldn't furrow your brow too much with the supply of fresh fish available here in Washington. I have just checked with one of my favorite fish authorities and learned what's on the fish line.

Here are the names of seven of them—Boston mackerel, bass, crab, trout, hardheads, shrimp and rock. So if you can't get meat you can at least have a different fish for every day in the week.

The Boston mackerels weigh one to two pounds and sell for about 30 cents a pound. Shrimp are about 55 to 60 cents per pound. Rock fish are available and run about three to five pounds each and about 40 cents a pound. Bass weigh about one pound each and are priced at about 20 cents a pound. Trout are plentiful weighing about three-fourths pound to three pounds and cost about 25 cents a pound. Hardheads are plentiful too and cost but 15 cents a pound. These fish weigh from three-fourths to three pounds each. Crab meat is available now, and costs about 80 cents to one dollar a pound. Any of these fish can be made delicious dishes.



Fish and seafood have come to the rescue of the cook in these days when meat is so scarce. Many delicious dishes can be made from both fish and seafood. Look over the fish line and then prepare the selected ones so that your diners will go for them hook, line and sinker.

There are several kinds of mackerel, all with characteristics which put them in a class by themselves—firm texture, extreme oiliness and the tendency to deteriorate rapidly after leaving the water. That means you must get and use your mackerel while fresh. Mackerel may be broiled since it contains its own fat and rare seasoning. The following procedure is very simple:

BROILED MACKEREL

Wash mackerel and split in half. Season with salt and pepper, then place on a well-greased broiler rack. Broil on both sides until tender, 10 to 15 minutes per side. Place on hot platter, sprinkle with cayenne and serve with a sauce made of 3 tablespoons melted butter, juice of ½ lemon and 1 tablespoon chopped parsely. Allow ¼ pound per person.

Here is a menu which includes broiled mackerel, although any other fish could be used in its place:

Dinner Menu

Chilled Tomato Juice
Broiled Mackerel
Baked Potatoes Squash with Onions
Enriched Bread Butter
Honey Dew Melon Beverage

Bass will also make a fine pivotal dish. A 3-pound bass will cost you about 60 cents. That's good and thrifty eating in these war days. Here is a recipe for baking bass:

BAKED BASS

Leave the head and tail on a 3-pound bass. Salt and pepper fish, put 2 tablespoons butter inside, along with 2 parsley sprigs. Cut a letter S in skin of fish on both sides and lay in buttered baking pan. Mix 1 minced onion, 1½ chopped green peppers, 1 small celery stalk, chopped, and 1 teaspoon minced parsley (garlic is optional and may be included in mixture or not) and spread over fish. Pour 2 cups tomato pulp into pan, dot fish with butter and bake in medium oven, basting frequently. When done, transfer fish to hot platter and strain pan contents over it. Or strained pan contents may be slightly thickened and served in separate sauce dish.

Mackerel is a fish which can be boiled with splendid results. And when served with mustard sauce this way of preparing fish goes to new heights. A recipe for preparing it follows:

BOILED MACKEREL WITH MUSTARD SAUCE

Split and bone 2 pound mackerel, leaving the two halves attached so it appears whole. Lay in shallow casserole, add 1½ cups fish broth with 1 teaspoon minced parsley, 1 small onion, chopped, ½ teaspoon anchovy paste, salt and pepper and add ¼-cup port wine. Bring quickly to boiling point and poach just below boiling point about 20 minutes. Take out fish gently and put on hot platter. Rub off skin. Strain 1 cup cooked liquid, add 1 teapoon mustard, juice of ½ lemon and ¼-cup port, and serve as sauce, thickened or not.

Fish soups make thrifty food. For those days when you want to make meal-getting very simple try the following recipes:

FISH MULLIGAN

Cut 1 pound fish into chunks, slice 4 large potatoes and 2 large onions ½-inch thick. Place in a kettle, add 6 cups hot water and bring to a boil. Add 1-3-cup uncooked rice, 2 green peppers, diced, and 1-3-cup diced bacon or salt pork. Simmer about 30 minutes or until tender. Add 2 tablespoons minced parsley and a few slices of dry bread. Leftover vegetables, such as corn or peas may be added. Season to taste. Bring to boiling point. Serves 6 to 8.

CREAM OF CRAB SOUP

Melt 2 tablespoons butter in top of double boiler, add 1 tablespoon flour and blend. Add 2 quarts milk gradually, stirring constantly. Add ½ onion, sliced, 2 tablespoons chopped parsley, and ½-cup cooked celery, and season to taste. Cook slowly until soup thickens a little; add 2 cups crab meat, flaked. Serves 8.

Time to Make Chili Sauce

Tomatoes are ripe. Tomatoes are cheaper. So now's the time to get out the preserving kettle and make some chili sauce and tomato catsup to be used with those so-good meals we will all be concocting out of we-know-not-what at the present writing. But you can bet that these accessory foods will get a warm welcome come winter days and heavy foods.

Here are recipes for making chili sauce and tomato catsup:

CHILI SAUCE

Peel and prepare 1 gallon chopped ripe tomatoes and ½ cup chopped white onions. Boil with ½ cup chopped sweet green peppers, ½ cup chopped sweet red peppers, 5 teaspoons salt, ½ cup brown sugar, ½ teaspoon cayenne pepper 1 teaspoon nutmeg, grated, 2 teaspoons ginger, 1 teaspoon cinnamon, and 1 teaspoon mustard for two hours. Add 1 quart vinegar and cook to desired consistency. Pour into sterilized jars and seal.

TOMATO CATSUP

Wash and slice 1 peck (12½ pounds) ripe tomatoes and boil about 15 minutes or until soft. Into another kettle slice 2 medium sized onions. Cover with a small quantity of water and cook until tender. Run the cooked onions and tomatoes through a sieve. Mix the onion and tomato pulp. Add ¼ teaspoon cayenne pepper. Boil this mixture rapidly until it has been reduced to about ½ its original volume.

Place 2 cups cider vinegar in an enamel pan and add a spice bag containing 1½ tablespoons broken cinnamon sticks, 1 tablespoon whole cloves and 3 cloves garlic, finely chopped. Allow this to simmer for about 30 minutes, then bring to a boiling point. Place cover on pan and remove from fire. Allow this to stand in covered pan until ready to use.

When tomato mixture has cooked down to ½ original volume, add vinegar mixture, of which there should be 1¼ cups. Add 1 cup sugar, 2½ teaspoons salt and 1 tablespoon paprika and boil rapidly until desired consistency is reached. This should require about 10 minutes. Pour while hot into sterilized jars and seal.

Fatigue Aided By Beverage And Snack

When Junior begs for a soft drink or a sandwich in the middle of the afternoon, he's not pampering his appetite as some mothers think. Instead, he subconsciously is trying to cope with a very natural attack of fatigue which besets all active individuals, children, warworkers, and soldiers alike.

Hard play, monotonous work, and nervous tension all produce fatigue, that tired, let-down feeling which causes our work output to drop. Fatigue is best relieved, mothers and war plant superintendents find, if the victims interrupt their work or play for a few moments of relaxation and at the same time consume a refreshing beverage with a bit of satisfying food.

In soft drinks, it is the moderate amount of sugar in the flavoring together with the cool refreshing liquid, which refreshes the active individual. The brief respite from regular activities permits the relaxation.

Too generous a snack between meals might impair appetites when regular eating hours arrive but refreshments in modest quantities enable the individual to keep going at a faster pace throughout the working day, according to present day authorities.

Grahams and Milk Good for Children

Nutrition experts recommend a light lunch of graham crackers and milk around 2:30 in the afternoon for growing youngsters. Children frequently ask for food between meals, and and they really need it to replace all the energy spent in strenuous play. It's not only all right but beneficial for them to have light and nutritious food such as graham crackers and milk. It should be given to them at a regular period every day, since regularity is necessary for maximum health.

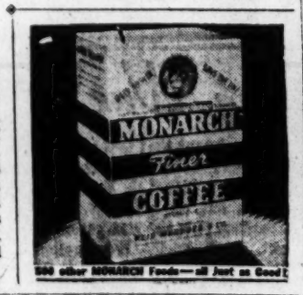
Keep Crackers for Evening Snacks

Around ten o'clock at night, do you hear that old familiar cry of "let's raid the icebox?" Do you groan inwardly and prance out to the kitchen to supervise the raiders and make sure they don't do away with any of the food that took precious ration coupons?

If you're smart, you'll lay down some hard and fast rules about what's available for evening snacks and have it on hand always. Conveniently packaged cookies and crackers, peanut butter and jelly, and milk are the makings of nutritious, inexpensive and unrationed lunch. If these items are kept within easy reach, the raiders will be content, and the danger of their getting away with tomorrow's dinner will be minimized.

Short Cut

Soak kidney beans in hot water and you shorten the cooking time. So much the better if you have soft rain water—Westinghouse home economists explain that hard water tends to make the beans tough so that they never seem done.



Armour Ideas Make the Most of Meat

All Star Sausage Dinner, Quick and Delicious

It's a grand idea for supper on a broiling-hot night. You can fix it in a jiffy, using slices of three different Armour's Star cold cuts and sausages. It's cool and refreshing for your family or guests and as nourishing as a meat meal can be. For Armour makes all of these sausages of fresh, wholesome meat cuts. They're delicately seasoned, thoroughly cooked, all ready to slice and serve.

In center of large chop plate, place three green peppers or tomatoes which have been hollowed out to form cups. Fill them with gherkins, stuffed olives and pickled onions respectively. Around the edge arrange chilled slices of Armour's Star Old Fashioned Loaf (a blend of beef and pork) and Star Liver Sausage. Alternate with Star Bologna Rolls—made by simply spreading slices of bologna with a mixture of cream cheese and horseradish, rolling and fastening with toothpicks. If you buy ¼ to ½ lb. of each sausage for this dish, it will be ample for 4 people and require only about 4 to 5 red points. Try it tonight.

★ ARMOUR AND COMPANY

Well-Chilled Drinks Best for Body

Iced drinks, including soft drinks and water, are more refreshing and better for the human body if consumed when well chilled rather than very cold during hot weather. Most authorities recommend a temperature not lower than 40 degrees, which is the temperature indorsed for war plants where carbonated beverages are consumed in large quantities.

Taking any beverage at a lower temperature is likely to cause temporary discomfort, and the flavor of carbonated beverages is more enjoyable if the drink is consumed at the approved temperature.

Soft drink vending machines in war plants usually are set to maintain a 40-degree reading and that is the typical operating temperature of home refrigerators. Bottles placed in the ice box usually attain the approved temperature in two or three hours, so that the addition of ice or ice cubes is not necessary if the drink is to be consumed promptly by tired and thirsty members of the family.

A Woman's Housecoat

By Ruth Gregory

Who said it can't be found? Here's a summer housecoat for women (sizes 38 to 44) that solves the heat and laundry problems, as well as that important matter of looking attractive.

It's a cool, crepy cotton (looks like seersucker) in white with red, or blue, or green stripes. Very nice lines, it has, with a trim lapel collar and a soft tie front.

When the alarm clock goes off, as it probably does for you (and most of us) six days a week, a wrap like this will give you some incentive for popping out of bed (everybody ought to have some kind of one). Maybe your husband will come out from behind his morning paper (all husbands are supposed to ignore their wives at breakfast, according to the storybooks), and say, "Well, how nice you look," or something equally gratifying.

Like seersucker, it doesn't call for a tussle with the washboard and the iron. A little jouncing in lukewarm suds, a quick rinse, hang it up to dry—that's all it takes to keep it as fresh as the day you bought it.

For about $4, we think it's very good.

Your Baby And Mine

By Myrtle Meyer Eldred

The mother about whom a neighbor writes is one of those indivíduals I am incapable of understanding. My mind reels at the idea of a parent who has spent nine long months bringing a human being into the world and then treats it as one would an animal.

Mrs. J. M. thinks something I may say may have some influence on this cruel parent. "Since the baby was 7 months old," she writes, "she has been spanking her for every natural thing she does. If the baby doesn't close her eyes instantly when she is put to bed for a nap or at night, she spanks her. Even if the baby doesn't cry but just moves around, she spanks.

"She commands and scolds the child constantly and thinks she is being successful because the baby seems to mind her and so far doesn't act afraid of her. I think she is all wrong and if she beat the child I would notify the juvenile authorities. But so far she hasn't. Yet this constant spanking seems to me so wrong and so uncalled for. The baby is a sweet child, too."

My frank opinion is the bother is mentally subnormal or partially insane. She certainly can't think straight, for she uses not the least atom of sense in her treatment of the baby and she shows no human feeling for it. She couldn't possibly keep on hitting a 9-month-old child for everything and anything, in fact for all the perfectly natural behavior of babyhoid, if she were a normal person.

Do bring her case before the local humane society. She needs to be brought to her senses or the baby taken from her. I shudder for its future when it really begins to develop some personality and opposes her.

Our leaflet, "Early Discipline," may be had by sending a 3-cent stamped, self-addressed envelope with your request to Myrtle Meyer Eldred in care of this newspaper.

News of the Women's Clubs

By Genevieve Reynolds

Civic minded Mrs. Edward Campbell Shields, who knows Washington from A to Z—she was born here—is convinced that the District must have suffrage.

For every argument you advance against it she comes back with so much logic soon you are agreeing with her. "When the citizens of the District of Columbia have the vote, they can eliminate many of the existing evils," she said, "but the people must take their voting responsibility seriously. Also they must obtain the vote."

Past president of Stonewall Jackson Chapter, United Daughters of the Confederacy, and former president of the American Woman's Legions of World Wars, Mrs. Shields thinks women should be preparing now for the postwar world.

"Not only should women study every phase of the postwar problems, but be ready to lead in the reconstruction," she declared. "Add women's intuitive abilities to knowledge and you'll get qualities of real leadership."

She pointed out that the feminine sex could do much in setting this country on a firm foundation for recovery. They can do so by keeping where possible, and restoring when impossible, a normal way of life. For the more spectacular contribution, she advocates representation and participation in the making of the peace.

Energetic Mrs. Shields, who has a deep throaty voice—sounds like Ethel Barrymore's on the radio—is knee-deep in war work. You'll find her doing a stint with the Red Cross. Twice a week she works at the Stage Door Canteen, alternating between senior hostess and the food bar. The boys like her keen wit, gay humor and sympathetic understanding of their problems. Often they pass up the younger hostess to chat with her about their ambitions, lives, etc. Always she has a good story ready to knock them out of the dumps. Fun loving herself, she likes to see other people having a good time.

Ever ready to lift the serviceman's morale, Mrs. Shields, who has traveled abroad many times, also works at the Recreation Center, Servicemen's Club No. 1, at Ninth and Pennsylvania Avenue.

When she isn't tied down with family responsibilities or completely enmeshed in clubwork, you'll find her taking an active part in dramatic work. Her favorite form of recreation is bridge and she's a whiz at it.

Again referring to the voting question, Mrs. Shields said that if the people here had a vote they could get jobs better. She deplored the fact that many out-of-town people had been brought in to jam the city, yet many Washingtonians still are unable to get the jobs for which they are equipped.

The far-sighted vice president of the Washingtonians' Club (made up of those born and reared in the District) knows all the ins and outs of women's organizations here. Versatile, friendly with definite mimic abilities, she's great fun. Then meet Mrs. Shields and find out for yourself.

Three Rules for Washing Hose

Lukewarm water is important for protecting stocking colors. Hot water should be avoided, as should strong soap, if you want to keep the colors as clear and fresh looking as possible.

For that matter, lukewarm water is important for washing almost all colored fine fabrics. Some few dyes can stand hot water and soaking, but there is no way of knowing which they are. To be on the safe side, then, it is wise to stick to the lukewarm water rule. This is the first principle of the rule of three, which you will recall means (1) lukewarm water, (2) mild soap, (3) careful handling.

Boom Areas Often Snub New Workers

Servicemen and Families Royally Received Everywhere, However, Survey Indicates

By the Associated Press

Men in uniform may be welcome, but civilian warworkers are unwanted "foreigners' 'in many war boom areas, four field consultants for the women's division of the National Catholic Community Service branch of the United Service Organizations asserted yesterday.

Established populations resent the disturbance of their normal living resulting by the mass influx of warworkers and resultant overcrowding, food, sanitation, child care and recreational problems, they said in an interview.

"In New England communities, where they're all Americans, they don't want new racial groups," said Miss Dorothy Catherine Sullivan, who lists her own home as New Haven, Conn.

They're Set in Their Ways

"They're set in their ways and look upon newcomers as foreigners," she continued. "Most of all, they're afraid the newcomers will settle down to stay after the war."

Similar reactions are found on the West Coast and in the South, agreed Miss Margaret Mealey of Oakland, Calif., and Miss Bettie Weary of New York City, who investigated the South.

Miss Lilias Smith of Faribault, Minn., said the Southwest housing shortage is aggravated by the raising of rents beyond workers' purses.

"The OPA (Office of Price Administration, which controls rent ceilings) hasn't really gone into that area," she asserted. "They send someone in to set rent ceilings, but the minute he leaves the natives ignore the regulations and raise rent prices where they want to."

Most acute problem, the consultants agree, is that of housing for women with children and child care in instances where the mothers work.

Texans Want Them to Stay

"Native landlords don't want women and absolutely won't have anything to do with women with children," Miss Weary declared.

However, West and Southwest were praised by Miss Mealey and Miss Smith for what they termed all-out hospitality to servicemen and their families.

In Texas, Miss Smith said, ranchers invite soldiers to come out for dinner or to bring their wives and spend their leaves on the ranch.

"Texans want the new people to stay," 'Miss Smith declared. "And they are making room for them."

In the desert maneuver areas in the Far West, Miss Mealey said, small communities turn themselves inside out to provide food, showers and recreation for the soldiers and housing for their wives.

Capt. Gatch Gets Second Award For Naval Heroism

Capt. Thomas L. Gatch of Washington and Annapolis, Md., who won his first Navy Cross several months ago as skipper of the famed battleship "X," which destroyed 32 Jap planes and sank four warships, has been awarded a Gold Star in lieu of a second Navy Cross for heroism in a night battle near Guadalcanal.

The action for which Captain Gatch was decorated took place off Savo Island on November 14 and 15.

Captain Gatch, who resides at 3103 Macomb Street Northwest, is now on inactive duty as a result of the wounds he received in the early encounter. A native of Oregon, he served in the judge advocate general's office at the Navy Department in 1922 and from 1940 to 1942. While here, he received a law degree from George Washington University law school. His son, Thomas, jr., was recently appointed to West Point.

I'm Not In the Movies But I Am A Pin-Up Girl

John's letter came Friday. I had sent him a little snapshot of me . . just one of those things the man in the street snaps. True, I was on my way to have lunch with the girls . . but I wasn't dressed in my best.

John says the boys took one look at it and said, "Say, bo, you've got a pin-up girl in your house, all right." And up I went over the doorway of their shack in New Guinea.

Says the only trouble is, the fellows think he's in the money 'cause he's got such a snappy-looking wife. And he says he just told them he had the best dressed little woman on F St. Made me feel kinda puffed-up inside . . made me think I was pretty smart after all to hitch my fashion-wagon not to some Hollywood star, but to the Main Floor Accessory Departments at The Hecht Co.

That's where I find my magic box of tricks. They coax a simple dress into leading almost nine lives. Sometimes it's a frothy collar I pick up . . . sometimes a swash-bucklin' belt . . or a prim little vestee. Sometimes, a bold, wide bracelet and glitter earrings, if I'm in a razzle-dazzle mood.

Want to be a pin-up girl like me? It's really very simple. Get well acquainted with The Hecht Co. Main Floor departments that always boast the newest fashions . . . the most potent prescriptions for prettifying, a girl can find anywhere.
